WINNING THE WILDERNESS WAR: The protection this Zion National Park canyon area is being sought for additional acres of Utah wilderness. A debate rages in the House bills battle for Utah wilderness

By GRETCHEN WILSON
Universe Staff Writer

The word "wilderness" often conjures images of tumbleweed, dirt and desolation.

Congress attempted to define "wilderness" with the 1964 Wilderness Act. Dispute over that definition has surfaced in bills currently before the U.S. House, and members of Congress are butting heads.

It is at the heart of this clash between politics and wilderness, with 23 million acres of wilderness land on the line. As key players gather support and enter the fight, passions and passions flare, anticipating an explosive final

Congress has defined wilderness as "an area where the land and its community of life are untrammeled by man, where man himself is a visitor who does not remain." Main activities are prohibited on wilderness land. Hunting, fishing, backpacking and camping are prohibited, as are motorized vehicles, roads, off-road vehicles (including bicycles) and new dams or power lines are forbidden. Resource extraction and animal grazing are prohibited unless existing permits are still being honored.

Under this definition, federal lands are designated as wilderness. Twenty-three million acres of Utah land fit the wilderness definition and are consequently administered by the Bureau of Land Management, an arm of the Department of Interior.

In 1976, the BLM was ordered by Congress to review the land in the West designated as wilderness. The survey of the holdings took more than 10 years. In the end, the BLM recommended 1.9 million acres be designated as wilderness. The remaining 22 million acres of land were to be released for mining, livestock, roads and other previously prohibited activities.

Rep. Jim Hansen (R-Utah) wants those 22 million acres. Last June, Hansen introduced House Resolution 1000, commonly referred to as Utah's Wilderness Bill. The bill would guarantee the land be released from wilderness designation.

Hansen, a member of the Resource Committee and chair of the National Parks, Forests and Lands subcommittee, has the backing of many Republican Congress members. In 1980, America's Red Rock Wilderness Act, was introduced in 1989 by former Democratic Utah Sen. Wayne Owens. The bill designates 5.7 million acres as wilderness. It has the support of environmentalists and many Utah constituents.

Rep. Maurice Hinchey (D-N.Y.), also a member of the National Parks, Forests and Lands subcommittee, has taken over as HR 1500's sponsor.

But HR 1745 is causing a commotion.

A provision contained in HR 1745, called "hard release language," says once BLM land is released, it can never be managed or be considered wilderness again. No bill introduced in Congress has ever contained such a provision.

Environmentalists are infuriated.

Sam Rushforth, professor of botany and range sciences, said HR 1745 is the worst wilderness bill ever written. "It fundamentally alters the spirit of the 1964 Wilderness Act. The hard release language is a very poor legislative mandate," he said.

"The federal lands in Utah are not Utah lands. These are federal lands. They're my lands. They're your lands. It's appropriate for me to care about these lands," Rushforth said.

What lands is he referring to?

HR 1745 affects popular areas such as the San Rafael Reefs, the Escalante Canyons and the Dirty Devil Wilderness.

Chris Arthur, legislative assistant to Hinchey, agrees with Rushforth. "We should follow the original intent of the Wilderness Act and not make exceptions. The stream of this act should be respected," Arthur said.

Tom Price, of the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance, said if HR 1745 passes, wilderness wouldn't mean wilderness anymore.

Other members of Congress disagree.

Representative Bill Emerson (R-Mo.) supports HR 1745.

In a letter to his constituents, Emerson states that private homes and buildings as well as cultivated fields within the boundaries exist on part of the 5.7 million acres of lands dealt with in HR 1500. Consequently, the land does not meet the requirements for wilderness designation.

The intent of the 1964 Wilderness Act to "secure for the American people of present and future generations the benefits of an enduring resource of wilderness ... and so as to provide for the protection of these areas" has come into question.

Added to the pot are accusations that the Utah Congressional delegation caters to the needs of campaign contributors and not to Utah constituents. The fight continues.

More Saints outside U.S.

By STEVE JENSEN
Universe Staff Writer

It's official: The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints now has more than half of its 9.4 million members outside of the United States.

The announcement of the "crossover" from a U.S. to a non-U.S. majority of members in the ever-expanding worldwide religion came Monday in a news release issued by LDS Church leaders.

"The church is growing in a marvelous and wonderful way," said President Gordon B. Hinckley, world leader of the faith, in the news release.

Last Sunday was the estimated date of the actual crossover, according to a quotation from W. Larry Elkington, manager of the church's management information center, in the March issue of the Ensign.

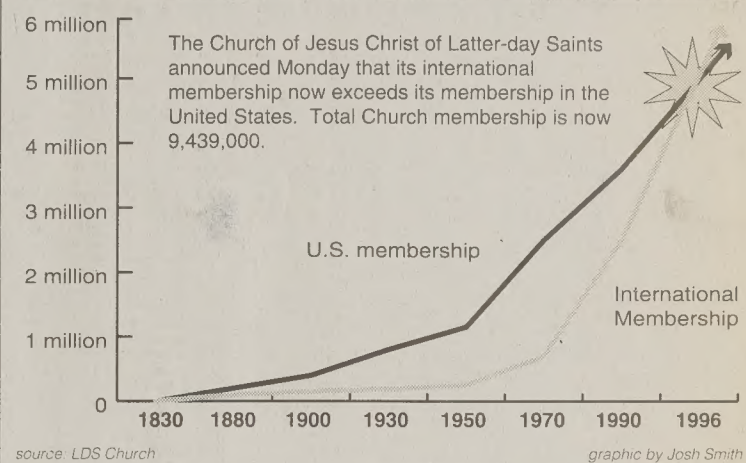

Elkington said the estimate came from the annual church growth reports. Based on the records, on Saturday there was a church population of 4,719,000 members outside the United States and the same number inside the United States for a total estimated church population of 9,438,000, he said.

"By (Sunday) of course the faster growing membership outside the U.S. crossed the equilibrium level of the previous day," Elkington said.

Although the crossover is a milestone in LDS Church history, it is not the first time it has happened, according to a news release. In the early 1850s, nearly twice as many Latter-day Saints were in England and Wales (c. 35,000) as in the United States (c. 18,000). But most of those early converts soon emigrated to the American West, the release said.

Today, the LDS Church is one of the fastest growing Christian churches in the world.

International membership growing

"We have a demanding religion," President Hinckley said in the release. "We have great expectations concerning our people. We have standards that we expect them to live by, and that is one of the things that attracts people to this church: It stands as an anchor in a world of shifting values."

The most dramatic growth has been in Latin America, home to more than three million Latter-day Saints, the release said. After the United States, the countries with the most LDS members are Mexico and Brazil.

Dixon Anderson, BYU emeritus professor of Spanish, who served an LDS mission in Mexico in 1949, said the LDS Church in Mexico has come a long way from its humble beginnings.

"When I arrived in the Mexican Mission in March of 1949, there were two branches of the church in Mexico City," Anderson said. According to the news release, Mexico now has 735,000 members.

"You can see how much it has grown in just that short time," Anderson said.

No less rapid has been the LDS Church's growth in Brazil. LDS Missionary Training Center District President Merrill Frost, who served as president of the Brazil Recife Mission from 1985-86, said LDS leadership in the giant South American country has been forced into the hands of younger Latter-day Saints.

"We're getting stake presidents in Brazil that are in their 30s," Frost said. "These are all young men holding very responsible positions, and you just don't see that happening in the states."

Frost said the caliber of Brazilian leadership has been steadily growing along with the number of members.

"Their leadership grows with their maturity in the church," he said.

Frost said that in 1952, when he served an LDS mission, there were 34 missionaries in Brazil. Now there are 26 missions and 300 new members a month, he said. There is even a former stake president from Fortaleza, Brazil, who is the current governor of one of the Brazilian states, Frost said. His name is Moroni.

Associated Press

BOB DOLE

Flat-tax champion Steve Forbes captured Arizona's winner-take-all primary Tuesday, shocking Pat Buchanan and Bob Dole to seize an improbable lead in the turbulent Republican presidential race.

Stung in the night's showdown contest, Dole took some solace in winning North and South Dakota.

For Forbes, the dramatic Arizona win meant back-to-back victory celebrations after disappointing fourth-place showings in Iowa and New Hampshire had his candidacy in jeopardy.

The publishing heir won Delaware's primary Saturday and used that boost — and another major personal investment in TV ads — to surge past Buchanan and Dole in the final weekend of Arizona campaigning.

With one-third of Arizona's vote tallied, Forbes was leading with 36 percent. Buchanan and Dole were battling for second; exit polling suggested Buchanan had the edge.

Lamar Alexander was a dim afterthought on the first multistate primary day of the muddled GOP campaign, and some leading Dole supporters said it was time for the former Tennessee governor to get out of the way.

Tuesday's results put Forbes well ahead in The Associated Press delegate count, with 60 so far. Buchanan had 37 and Dole 36, while Alexander had 10 delegates.

UTA buses banished from University Mall

Transit Authority buses will no longer be servicing University Mall. The buses will make one stop at 1200 E. 1200 South, just outside the mall's property line.

The transfers that formerly took place at the east entrance of the mall will now occur at the 740 E. 1200 South stop. The change came after years of negotiations between the mall and University Mall officials.

Kallas, manager of University Mall, stated three major problems that the mall had concerning UTA buses.

Kallas said physical problems topped the list of complaints. He said UTA buses make more than 250 daily round-trips across the mall's parking lot.

Kallas said the parking lot was not built the same as a city road and is not intended to support the heavy pressure the UTA buses bring. Two years ago, the mall spent $100,000 in asphalt repairs and another $50,000 last year.

"Over the years we have occasionally financed part of the repair expenses," said Bill Barnes, spokesman for UTA.

The second problem is traffic congestion. The route that the buses take through the mall is long and cumbersome according to everyone involved, Kallas said.

The route starts at the south entrance of the mall, stops at Firestone, weaves through the lot toward the Cineplex-Odeon Theatre, stops, turns behind Mervyn's, stops at the east entrance and then goes back through the lot to exit at either the south or southeast entrances. The route was set by the

Varsity thrives despite price increase

By CARMEN DURLAND
Universe Staff Writer

BYU students have been paying $2 instead of $1.50 for movies at the Varsity Theater since September, but the increase hasn't reduced ticket sales, said Lannis Alligood, assistant director for Student Leadership Development.

The theater's price increase was due to rising costs of running the theater, inflation and student wage increases, Alligood said.

Jonathan Nabrotzky, a freshman from Corona, Calif., majoring in accounting, goes to movies at the Varsity Theater about three times a month. He goes to see the edited versions of R-rated movies, he said.

"If you really want good, clean entertainment — (the price is) worth it," Nabrotzky said.

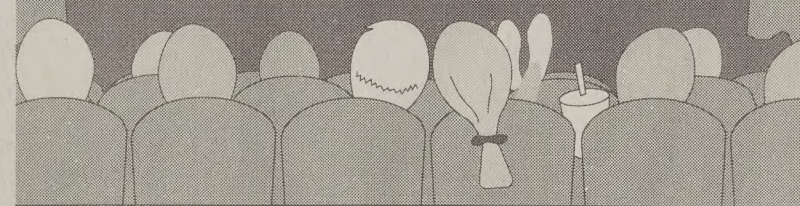

Elizabeth Stutznegger, a sophomore from Oroville, Calif., majoring in biology composite teaching, agrees. "The only reason I go (to the Varsity Theater) is to see R-rated movies," she said. Stutznegger said she can see other movies at cheaper theaters.

Movies are still selling out at the Varsity Theater despite a 50-cent increase in ticket prices. Edited versions of rated-R movies have been among the most popular.

out at the theater are "Crimson Tide," "A Few Good Men," "First Knight," "The Net," "Outbreak," "Shawshank Redemption," "A Walk in the Clouds" and "Dangerous Minds," according to Varsity Theater management records.

All of these movies were originally rated R except "First Knight" (PG), "The Net" (PG-13) and "A Walk in the Clouds" (PG).

The final selection of movies scheduled at the Varsity Theater is edited by the Films Committee, comprised of five to 10 faculty members, administrators and students, Alligood said.

The theater management does student surveys to find out what movies students would like to see and reads reviews to find out the content of potential movie selections, he said.

Marion Bentley, a theater and film professor, is an advisor to the Films Committee and makes recommendations of movies to be shown.

To recommend a movie, Bentley looks to see that it has positive value, can be edited without compromising the movie and has audience appeal and benefit, he said.

For example, Bentley said he would recommend "Mr. Holland's Opus" and "Sense and Sensibility" but would not recommend "Braveheart" or "City Hall." "Braveheart" seemed too violent, and "City Hall" was supposed to portray integrity but was not particularly well done, he said.

A suggested movie schedule is then passed on to the Films Committee, which makes the final decision of which movies to show. Movies are ordered through a distributor and edited, Alligood said.

Cubans 'joyfully' shot down 2 U.S. planes

UNITED NATIONS — The United States released a transcript of Cuban communications Tuesday that U.S. Ambassador Madeleine Albright said showed the Cubans joyfully fired at two small American planes last Saturday.

"The target is in sight, the target is in sight," the transcript shows one of the MiG pilots radioing back to his headquarters. "It's a small aircraft."

"Copied. A small plane in sight," the ground controller responded.

A few moments later, the MiG pilot identified his target as a Cessna 337. The controller then said the pilot was "authorized to destroy."

"I was struck by the joy of these pilots in committing cold-blooded murder," Albright said as she released the transcripts. "Frankly, this is ... cowardice."

Albright released the transcript shortly before the expected arrival of Cuban Foreign Minister Roberto Robaina, who has come to present his country's case to the United Nations.

The Cubans claim the planes violated their airspace and were part of a series of provocations by Cuban exiles in league with the U.S. government.

"International peace and security is not what is threatened today," said Cuban's acting ambassador, Bruno Rodriguez Parrilla. "It is the peace, sovereignty and security of Cuba which have been endangered for more than 35 years because of ... those in position of strength who promote action against my country."

Suspect in suicide bombings said farewell

AL FAWAR REFUGEE CAMP, West Bank — Majdi Abu Wardeh disappeared last week, leaving behind his photograph with the words "Farewell, Izzedine al Qassam Brigades" — the military wing of the militant Palestinian group Hamas — written on the back.

Abu Wardeh and another missing Palestinian became suspects Tuesday in two weekend suicide bombings that killed 27 people in Jerusalem and Ashkelon.

Israeli soldiers raided their homes in the Al Fawar refugee camp outside Hebron late Monday, seizing documents and photographs. Troops arrested a dozen family members.

Palestinian officials said Israel was partially responsible for failing to prevent the attacks, noting the Hebron area is still under Israeli control.

Still, bowing to Israeli pressure, Yasser Arafat's security forces arrested more than 120 Hamas activists in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, Hamas members said. None of those detained belonged to Hamas' military wing, and only two were leading figures.

Arafat has ordered such arrest sweeps in the past after suicide bombings, but has always released the detainees later.

Satellite has dead computer, empty gas tank

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The plot thickened Tuesday: NASA managed to communicate with the escaped satellite-on-a-cord and discovered it had a dead computer and an empty gas tank.

"There has been an event on the satellite that we do not understand yet," Mission Control told the astronauts aboard space shuttle Columbia.

NASA officials said they were uncertain whether the satellite problems were connected to Sunday night's break in the 12-mile cord.

All data indicated the satellite was fine when it broke loose from Columbia and for at least 30 minutes afterward. Stray voltage or circuitry trouble may have caused the satellite systems to malfunction, NASA said.

"It's a very interesting puzzle," said NASA's Anthony Lavoie, chief engineer for the satellite. "We don't have all the answers right now."

U.N. lifts sanctions against Bosnian Serbs

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The United Nations and Serb-dominated Yugoslavia lifted sanctions against Bosnian Serbs on Tuesday as a reward for accepting peace.

The U.N. suspension was announced in New York by the Security Council president, U.S. Ambassador Madeleine Albright. It came after the council received a letter from NATO certifying that the Bosnian Serbs had withdrawn their forces from buffer zones established under the Dayton peace agreement.

The Yugoslav move, announced by the official news agency Tanjug, aimed to ease tensions between the Bosnian Serbs and President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia, Yugoslavia's most powerful politician.

The sanctions, imposed at Milosevic's behest 18 months ago, marked a formal end to Serb-dominated Yugoslavia's support of the Bosnian Serb war effort.

Merit, not race, decides admissions, scholarships

Editor's Note: This is the second of three articles about the experiences of black students at BYU.

By MICHAEL SMART
Universe Staff Writer

Though some students feel BYU gives black students an unfair advantage when competing for scholarships and admissions, race is not a factor in determining academic scholarships.

Duane Bartle, scholarship coordinator, said academic scholarships are "blind to race, blind to need."

"Other than multicultural, no scholarships are earmarked for any group," Bartle said.

Receiving an academic scholarship "has no bearing upon name or where you're from or anything else except academic merit — grades, ACT scores, weighted courses," she said.

One Caucasian student, who wished to not be named, feels differently.

She said, "Anybody who has the grades for a scholarship should get one. It shouldn't be a race-based issue."

"I had a 3.95 GPA at Ricks (College), and I got denied for an academic scholarship, and I know some minorities who got academic scholarships with lower qualifications than me," she said.

"It's fine if they're getting multicultural scholarships, but they shouldn't get academic scholarships just because of race," she said.

Some students also feel the university admits black students more readily than Caucasian students.

"They can get in easier because the administration wants more color on campus," said another student.

Tom Gourley, director of admissions, said admission to the university is weighted so academic preparation such as GPA and ACT scores count for 75 percent of a candidate's preparation index.

The other 25 percent comes from rating the candidates' essays and recommendations, which include variables such as service or special talents.

Being a minority falls into the "other" category, Gourley said.

"Race is one of the things we'll notice, but that alone won't do it," he said.

"If everything else (academic preparation and ecclesiastical endorsements) is competitive, the fact that they're a minority might tip the scale, just like somebody who plays the piano well or is a good debater.

"We want a cosmopolitan campus, one that represents the world," he said.

In response to some students' sentiments that color is a free pass into the university, Gourley said race was only one of many factors.

"(Race) alone does not guarantee admission, although it could weigh in the ultimate decision. I've seen some active LDS blacks denied because their total package — service, essays, everything — may be low," he said.

Gourley said Caucasian students who are denied admission to BYU or a scholarship want to blame someone else for their disappointment.

"The easiest, most obvious thing to point to is their color," he said.

Gourley said the students making these accusations haven't read their essays and recommendations.

Disability Awareness Week promotes sensitivity, helping

In every human heart is the desire to be independent, to be able to stand on one's own. A baby's struggle to stand and walk, his rage at someone else trying to manipulate his spoon — even the toddler's incessant "let me do it" all prove that self-reliance is a deep-set urge long before the teen-ager pleads for the car keys.

But sometimes something happens, at birth or later on, to put a person at a disadvantage in the struggle for autonomy. Some people have impaired vision, or no vision at all. Still, they go to school, serve missions, raise families. Some people will never experience Bach, the power of a passionate hymn. Dizzy Gillespie or Elton John.

But the deaf, like any group of people thrust together by a common challenge, bond and share a unique and vibrant culture, one not always understood by "hearing people."

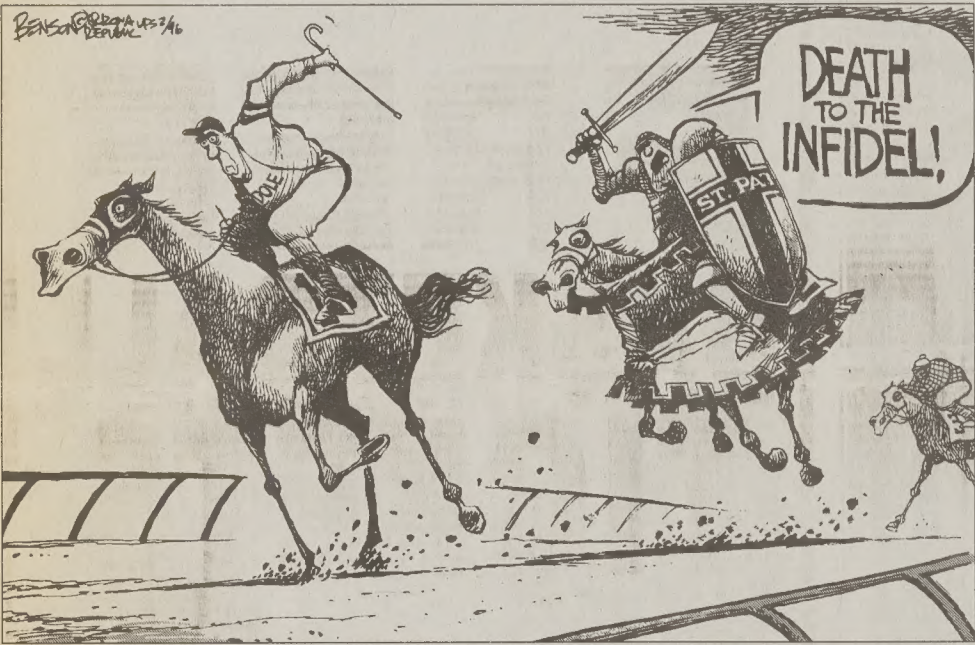

And some of our brothers and sisters leave behind tire treads, not sneaker tracks, as they meet the challenges of the day. For them, a thoughtlessly parked vehicle or a suddenly appearing stairway can be obstacles, even serious dangers.

It is by now almost a cliché, the old proverb that you cannot understand a man until you have walked a mile in his moccasins. Maybe today we could suggest "Ride a mile in my chair." Suddenly, you will be paying attention to curbs, to ice clumps that can knock the rim of your tire off and leave you stranded. You will understand how frustrating it is when people don't watch where they're going and stumble over you, or jump into an elevator before you've had the chance to get off. And you will understand why automatic doors need to work and stairs need to be paired with ramps.

People with disabilities appreciate the common courtesies we should show everyone; opening doors, saying hello, offering a hand when they're stuck. The Office for Students with Disabilities, on the bottom floor of the Kimball Tower, can always use volunteers in its work.

Take advantage of the chance to DARE this week. Faculty, administrators, take the challenge, too — this is not meant to be a freshman fling. Pay attention to your experiences with temporary disabilities. Then do something about it.

Viewpoint

Parents' divorce has lasting effects on emotions, memories of children

Though the Daily Universe policy generally does not allow unsigned pieces to be printed, an exception was granted to the author of this Viewpoint, because of the personal nature of the material.

You hope and pray that it will never happen to you. Until one day when it finally does. You never quite know how to react or whether you should at all. You know that it will affect you no matter how distant you try to seem. You try to bring the attention to yourself and then you try to disappear. You meditate until you become so involved you can't handle the hurt. And then when you think that you can't hurt anymore — it happens.

Mommy and daddy have cut the ties and broken up the family. They don't mean to hurt you, but they do it anyway. The hurt stays for a long time and the scars never seem to go away. You try to cope with crying, yelling, sloppiness, a bad attitude, but none of it seems to work. They say they would never do anything to hurt you, but you don't know if you could be hurt worse.

The days spent waiting for daddy to come home so you could jump on his knee are long gone and the house becomes a quiet sanctuary of what used to be a pancake and tiger-play Saturday. You used to be excited just to see your hero walk through the door after a long day's work. Now you only see him when you have the time to go visit. It is never the same and most of the time you don't know what to say. All you know is that you love him and wish he could be home.

The family is never whole again. There is always something missing. Memories of family vacations often come to your head and you just wish they had never happened. The days when you were all happy together — a family. We laughed and giggled, and fought and played, and when our knees were skinned, both our parents were there to kiss the hurt away. Why was it that easy when we were young? Why can't they still kiss the hurt away? Just when we need it most, it no longer works.

You start to worry about your future and what it will bring to you. You vow never to marry anyone you would end up breaking up with, but then remember you never make a conscious decision to do so in the first place.

I believe both my parents deserve to be happy. We are down on this earth to prove ourselves to God and to be happy. He wants us to be happy. I have not seen either one of my parents happy for 10 years and that has caused me a lot of pain. I have seen them fight, and nit-pick, and bicker every day of their lives for the past five years. I cringe when they both walk in the same room because I know it will only lead to an argument. So I hold my breath and wait for the moment and try to fill their minds with other thoughts — events of the day, world news, weather. It never works, and soon I walk away with my head down and my ego under the bed.

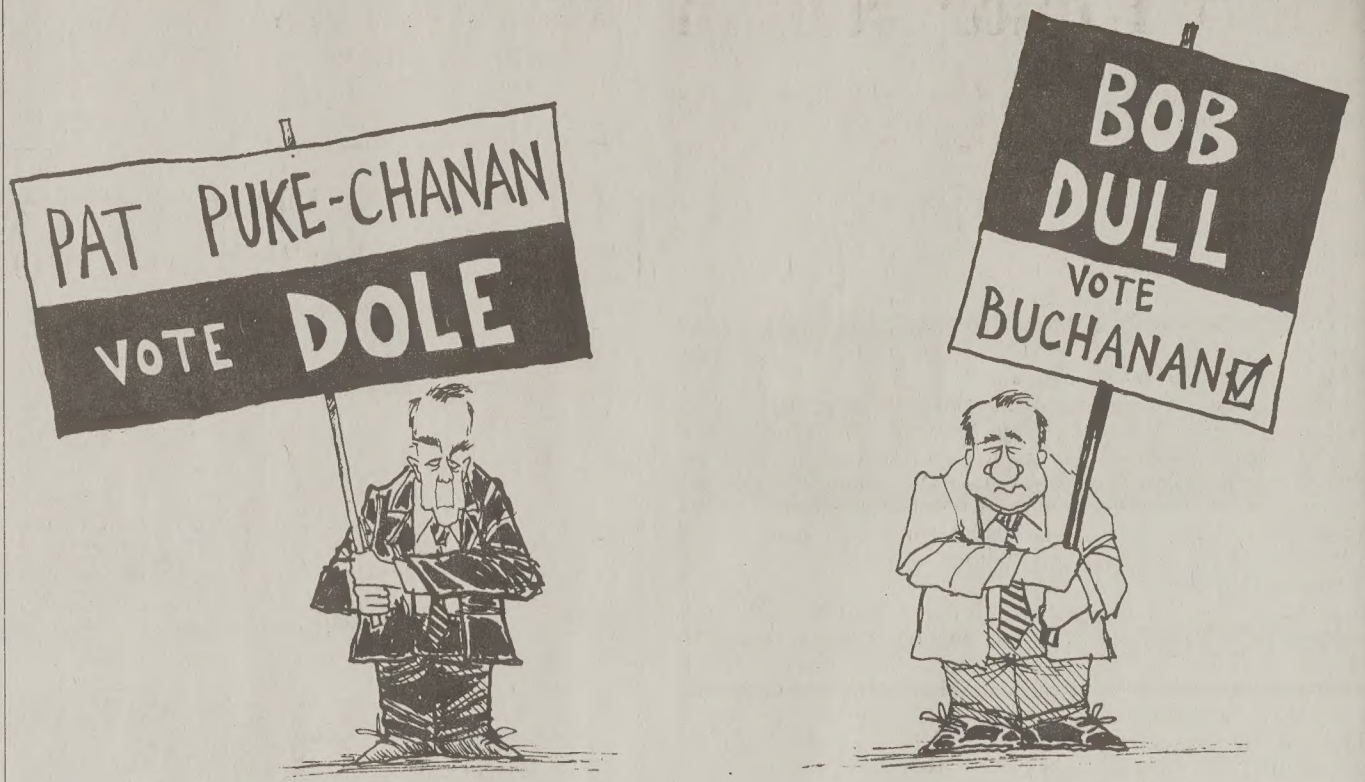

I guess I wanted to be able to rely on my parents for eternity. I always wanted their comfort and their support, but they didn't have enough time between all their fights. It is sad to see them leave the room when the other walks in and worst of all, you want to protect the other kids and try to divert their attention. I hoped all along that the kids would never have the chance to feel the pain that I was feeling. But I knew better. And I hated the fact that I knew better and I wish I could have protected them more.

I had to grow up real quick and I found myself being a parent to my parents. I was giving them advice and I was telling them I would always be there for them. I was telling them I would always love them and that I would always support them in whatever they did.

I was the one making sure everyone did their chores and tried to respect one another. I learned a lot from the whole ordeal, but I wouldn't wish it on my worst enemy. I don't know that anything can hurt more than that, and then I try to remember the pain that my parents are going through. Sometimes I wish that I wasn't the kid and then maybe everything wouldn't have gone so wrong. I wish I had some advice that could keep us all together like we should be. But the words never come out right and being together never becomes an option again.

A pupil of C.S. Lewis said that we read to know that we are not alone. I want those of you out there who are reading this article to know that you are not alone. In a world that seems like no one cares, remember that someone, somewhere has it worse off than you. I try to remember that as much as I can. Unfortunately, it doesn't always work.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGNING AT ITS BEST

Readers' Forum

Republicans help students

To the Editor:

During the past few months, the Republican Party has been badgered, bruised and beaten by those who profess to protect the interests of the American college student. A careful look at such demagoguery, however, shows it to have no basis whatsoever. As a matter of fact, four important points make clear that the GOP is nothing less than our nation's champion of higher education.

1. The Republican Congress has neither made nor executed plans for any serious reductions in student aid appropriations. In spite of the rhetoric to the contrary, this simply has not occurred.

2. The Republican Party favors fiscal responsibility including an amendment to the Constitution that would require a balanced budget. Only by keeping the size of the national debt to a minimum can interest rates be maintained low. Lower interest rates, of course, make borrowing cheaper for all students.

3. The Republicans favor tax relief for the American family. Every dollar that the establishment in Washington sends back to families across the nation is another dollar that can be invested in higher education or the other needs of the American people.

4. Congressional Republicans have no plans to increase the minimum wage. Unemployment today is highest among the young people of the country. The minimum wage prices many of these potentially college-bound students out of the labor market altogether. The effects of an increase in the minimum wage, as President Clinton has proposed, could only be detrimental to the group as a whole.

In an era of budget slashing and fiscal reform, the Republican Party has indeed taken little from the table. But to say that the Republicans are anti-student is absolutely preposterous. Far from opposing funds for higher education, Republicans see them as a valuable investment for the future of our country. And by advocating fiscal responsibility in place of the current chaos, the GOP backs a stable economy that will provide jobs for generations of college graduates to come.

Board's action anti-gay

To the Editor:

I was shocked and disappointed to see the reaction of the Salt Lake City Board of Education toward the proposed gay-straight student alliance at East High. With the many so-called controversies here at BYU regarding students' honor and the constant reminders that this is a church-owned institution. I have been made aware of instances where boundaries of authority may have been crossed. This is one of those times.

I consider myself to be a good Latter-day Saint, but when I see the hatred displayed toward homosexuals I am ashamed to be associated with the Salt Lake City school board through a common religious belief. Though I do not in any way condone homosexual practices, I feel its approach to the situation needs to be re-evaluated. By falling back solely on their religious convictions, the decision-makers open up new avenues of attack for the LDS Church to deal with, while casting the burden of consequence onto the body of the church, namely myself and every other member of the church.

My prayers go out to the school board and to all of the students affected by this monumental decision. I hope that the board of education can realize that by simply allowing a club to exist, it does not in any way condone or promote that kind of activity. They allowed a Beef Club and a Ski Club, but I don't think they ever sponsored them with the intent of getting people to ski or to push them into the consumption of meat products. By taking a hard-line stance and dragging the church into it, they are going against the Lord's counsel to "love the sinner, hate the sin," and go quite contrary to the advice that we should be tolerant and understanding toward all people.

Aside from everything else, I feel that it is not up to the board of education to decide what is right or wrong: "gay-straight student alliance" implies some sort of forum for students of all beliefs and moral views to come together and discuss the issues. By banning all clubs, the board has essentially carpet-bombed a city to destroy a single car. In other words, it was a rash act of bigotry which will bring serious repercussions to the Salt Lake City Board of Education, the students of the city, and ultimately the church and its members.

Injuries send message

To the Editor:

What will it take to get the message out? How many more injuries or even deaths will it take to teach drivers that failing to yield to pedestrians in a crosswalk is against the law? The accident on 900 East last Thursday did not surprise many people. Some said it was bound to happen when a woman was hit by a car while attempting to cross the road. According to code 41-6-78 in the Utah traffic code book, failing to stop for a pedestrian in a marked crosswalk is breaking the law. It is equivalent to running a stop sign or a red light.

As a driver, I do not have the right-of-way when I see a pedestrian in the middle of a crosswalk. I must yield to them, not vice-versa. Let us not have this accident replay itself over again. Next time you see a person in a crosswalk, by all means stop!

Don't take BYU for granted

To the Editor:

I took offense to an interview by local high school students regarding the pros and cons of attending BYU. A Timpview senior described BYU students as having a "holier-than-thou and self-righteous attitude." The LDS student said that he would not attend BYU because of the dress code and the attitude of the students. I ask the young man to examine his own attitude. The world is filled with too many people who mistake a religious conviction for an attitude and who decide on attending a university based on what they can wear instead of what they can learn.

My association with BYU has served to strengthen my testimony and my work has been a source of inspiration. The students and colleagues that I am associated with are hard-working, not holier-than-thou. It is sad when LDS youth who live in the shadow of the university take it for granted. I ask the Timpview senior to consider how he can defend the fruit of his church a thousand miles away when he fails to recognize and defend it in his own backyard.

Bad movies on campus

To the Editor:

I am appalled with the movies that are being shown on this campus. This is BYU — a church-run university. It is supported in part by the tithing of the church members and is supposed to reflect the standards of the church. Why, then are R-rated and other bad or questionable movies being shown on this campus? The prophets have specifically counseled us not to see R-rated movies and to carefully select what movies we watch.

"But," some might say, "the movies are edited so they are all right to watch." Someone has to view the movies in their unedited forms to be able to edit them. Is it right for these people to expose their minds to filth and garbage and go against the prophets' counsel just so that the rest of us can see diluted R and PG-13 movies? Also, showing edited R-rated movies on campus teaches people that it's all right to see those movies and then they begin watching unedited R-rated movies. This very thing happened on my floor last semester.

As a church, we are supposed to not be of the world and not to embrace the beliefs and values, or lack of values, of the world. We have all heard church leaders speak of the widening gap that is forming between the church and the world. It appears that BYU is not willing to keep itself unspotted from the world and to keep up with the church. I, for one, would like to see a university reflect the standards of the church more clearly, especially when it comes to the movies being shown on campus.

Communists not a threat

To the Editor:

Republican primary candidates are out quotes across the country, and at the time a radical element at BYU is still I refer to it as "The Red Scare." A victim is easy to recognize by the following traits:

1. The victim is commonly heard shouting quotes on communism from the 1950s to the 1980s.

2. The victim cannot understand the difference between a moderate Republican/Democrat and a communist.

3. The victim equates ideals very far from the Law of Consecration with Satanism.

4. When asked, the victim believes that the Star Wars program is our only defense.

To any such victims, I implore you to accept that the Cold War is over. Communism is no longer the world's threat. Consider that fact before voting.

Letter's satire overlooked

To the Editor:

I am writing to respond to two letters in Tuesday's edition of the Daily Universe. One was critical of Joel D. Wright's editorial of last week; the other of a political cartoon with souls before the gates of heaven.

Both of these students have missed the point; these expressions of opinion are satires, saying the opposite of what they really meant in a humorous or absurd manner. In this way, the cartoon and the letter were mocking the opinions they supposedly expressed.

Allow me to explain further. "Modest Proposal," Jonathan Swift's satire that we eat human children to solve population. Did Swift really advocate cannibalism? Of course not — he was trying to get the readers' attention and express his rage at the lack of action.

Likewise, Joel D. Wright was expressing outrage at the temple recommendation process by suggesting rules he thought similar to the rules that he knew would shock and offend. Obviously, Mr. Wright feels that the recommendation rule is extreme and needs to be changed because he lumps it with suggestions.

The political cartoon was also faced with in response to the recent A about BYU students and church members. The idea that people fall directly because they didn't attend BYU is ridiculous, and Aaron Taylor is trying to illustrate its absurdity.

If anyone feels I've missed the man or woman, why not ask Mr. Wright or Mr. Taylor if they really meant? In the meantime, haven't sufficiently explained satire, ask an English professor.

Taylor's cartoons pertinent

To the Editor:

As I read the editorials from February, I was irritated by one student's direction on the artist of BYU's political cartoon, the Daily Universe, Aaron Taylor. Over the past two years, I have enjoyed the cartoons that Aaron Taylor creates.

Taylor creates cartoons based on current events. His works reflect great social and political savvy, and his drawing him a definite future for some large paper. My kudos to Aaron Taylor for his unique cartoons he draws for us, his students.

Circle of Honor' rolls in

By NOELLE BARKER
Universe Staff Writer

As part of BYU's continued effort to increase awareness and participation in the Honor Code, President Bateman unveiled the new "Circle of Honor" campaign during a press conference Tuesday afternoon.

A group of observers gathered in the Maeser building to see the new campaign which features a photo of Karl Maeser, BYU's first principal, standing within a circle of chalk and a sign that he made expressing his belief in living a life of honor.

President Bateman introduced the campaign and Maeser used and how it related to the university as a reminder of the commitment to BYU and the Honor Code. Jonathan Kau of the Life said.

According to a Daily Herald article, President Bateman encouraged students to look at the poster asking themselves where they stand in the circle of honor, whether they are safely within its borders, wavering on its lines, or already beyond its edges. For students who have severed the circle of honor's borders, Bateman advised them to take the opportunity to return to the circle's center.

The idea of featuring Maeser for the campaign originated when President Hinckley spoke about Maeser's honor philosophy for an October 1995 devotional.

The poster is the latest step the university has taken to encourage both students and faculty to continue upholding BYU's standards of moral and ethical conduct. Students, faculty, staff and administrative personnel are all required to live up to these standards.

Framed posters will be displayed in various buildings across campus, with a permanent copy appropriately located in the Maeser building foyer. Free 8 1/2 by 11 inch copies of the posters will be available to students and faculty in the Honor Code Office and at selected offices on campus.

Earthquakes bring mixed reactions

Note: This is the final article in a three-part series on earthquake readiness in Utah and at BYU.

By BRETT SWIGERT
Universe Staff Writer

Seismological experts warning that an earthquake of a magnitude 7.0 or higher may occur at any time, how people will react in the event remains uncertain.

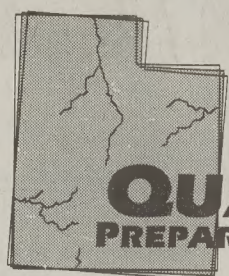

A geological survey indicates that a magnitude 7.5 quake in Salt Lake County alone could expect more than 600 dead, 44,000 injured, and $44 billion in damage to economic losses.

Since the settlers came to this area, earthquakes have never experienced a major earthquake here and so it's really become a reality to said Paula Ohemich, a seismology research analyst at the city of Utah.

Such a diverse background of people on campus, some may never experienced an earthquake while others have grown up with earthquakes in their entire lives.

Cecil, a junior from Laguna Hills, Calif., majoring in construction management, has experienced earthquakes while growing up in California.

Looking out the window, buildings were swaying side to side and there were awful noises of buildings creaking and just a rumbling noise and then when it was all over there was just an eerie silence," Cecil said.

Greg Tedrow, a junior from Orem, majoring in Japanese, said, "I think students will come together and be a tremendous help in relief and cleanup efforts — not just because of the LDS background but because such a disaster usually unifies people."

Utah has not experienced a major earthquake in the last 350 years.

"I suspect that we'd see a wide spectrum of reactions. Some would handle it very well while others would be severely frightened and in shock," said Wesley Sherwood, managing director of BYU's Risk Management and Safety.

Students can get more information at the Risk Management and Safety office at 101 Thomas House, located just south of the Marriott Center.

Teaching religion in a secular world

By ASHLEY EYRING
Universe Staff Writer

Religious universities can be a good source of diversity in American culture, said a Notre Dame professor at Tuesday's Forum in the Marriott Center.

George M. Marsden, Francis K. McAnaney Professor of History at the University of Notre Dame, focused on the subject, "Can a 'Real' University be Religious?"

The evolution from religious beginnings to predominantly secular institutions has become a common path for most universities.

"Virtually every university in this country started out as a strongly religious school, even the state universities," Marsden said.

Now the popular sign of a good university is one that drops its religious character. The modern belief has evolved to the idea that religion is fine as long as it is kept out of the main parts of cultural life and is kept as a hobby, he said.

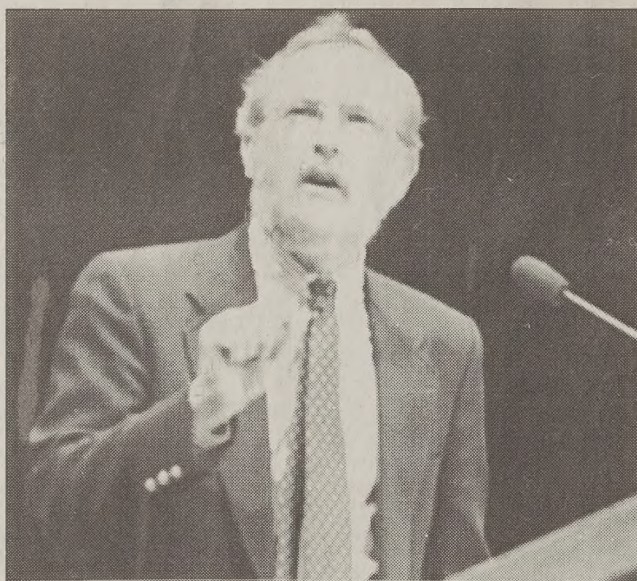

"Now I realize, of course, that BYU is an exception to that rule, that's why I'm here. It's a place where there is a real effort to integrate religious faith and higher education," Marsden said.

There is a tremendous pressure on universities such as BYU to conform to the national university culture, he said.

Where religious standards were once tolerated, religious universities can be discriminated against because they voice their religious beliefs.

"I think there is more pressure against the Mormon faith than there is against other faiths," Marsden said.

"How did we come from a time when religious faith was respected to

UNITY OR DIVERSITY?
Notre Dame Professor George M. Marsden spoke at Tuesday's Forum on how to unify cultures while retaining diversity in a university environment.

Deven Smith
Daily Universe

where we are today?" Marsden asked.

The pressure to put religious faith in a private category, keeping it away from education, is one of the strongest pressures facing religious universities.

"The next pressure that is important in the founding of American universities is pressure to promote unity in American culture despite American diversity," Marsden said.

In the early years of universities, in the late nineteenth century, there was a strong desire towards unity, a more perfect union. Since then diversity has become a major ideal along with that same impulse to unify cultures — which has created the ideal diversity, he said.

"Ideal diversity has the ironic twist to it that diversity can't remain, with respect to religion, the code word for uniformity," Marsden said.

The standard set of ideals is by no means neutral. No one tolerates everything, he said.

"It seems to me that there are ways for religiously-defined institutions to replace the mainstream culture without compromising the religious methods of the institution," Marsden said.

Adjustments can be made to relate to principles drawn from faith in professional fields.

While participating in secular things, a higher allegiance can be adhered to and put in a professional context that will not confuse people who do not believe the same way you do, he said.

Religious universities are needed to add diversity among institutions. Even though people may not always agree with the religions taught, the universities should act as models so that people can respect the university as a fine institution of learning, he said.

The Herbert Scoville Jr. Peace Fellowship Program: This program is designed to allow students with a bachelor's degree to experience Washington, D.C., while working full-time on arms-control research and/or advocacy. Fellows receive a $1,400 stipend each month, travel expenses and health insurance. Students choose an organization to work with from a list of participating organizations and then conduct independent projects, gaining experience and leadership skills. Fellows also choose a board member to serve as an ombudsman and mentor during their time in Washington. The program's goals are to provide a unique arms-control experience, develop leadership skills to be used in public service, contribute to the critically important work of the participating in arms control and disarmament organizations, and continue the work of Herbert Scoville Jr. The fellowship lasts for four months. The deadline for fall semester is March 15.

American Indian Graduate Center: The award is based on a student's native background. To be eligible for this scholarship, a student must be an enrolled member of a Native American tribe or be one-fourth Native American. The student must also be a full-time graduate student pursuing either a master's or a doctorate. The award is based on financial need. The deadline is May 1. More information is available is 350 MSRB.

Y alumni group to host workshops

By HELENA HARO
Universe Staff Writer

Professional football players and corporate presidents will address students when the Brigham Young University Student Alumni Association hosts the annual SAA District VII Conference Thursday.

The conference, which runs through Saturday, will host over 300 students from Utah, California, Nevada and Arizona, said Heidi Hess, assistant alumni activities director.

"Reaching New Heights" is the theme for the conference and the itinerary includes keynote speakers Hyrum Smith, chairman of Franklin Quest; Steve Young, San Francisco 49ers quarterback and former BYU football player; and Maren Mouritsen, dean of Student Life at BYU, Hess said.

Other workshops include "The Laugh Olympics" and "How to Establish and Organize Your Internet Homepage," Hess said.

"The purpose of the conferences is to teach programming skills and to share ideas with different universities. We have 17 sessions and we teach leadership skills to the delegates," Hess said.

"The district conferences have been running for 13 years and this is the second time that we have hosted. We hosted a conference back in 1985 as well," Hess said.

Conference chair Jeff Joyce said, "The impact of this conference upon the lives of those attending will be far reaching in terms of teaching values, self-worth and leadership skills."

The first student alumni association in the nation was established in the 1940s at Indiana University. During the 1950s, 60s and 70s, similar programs appeared sporadically throughout the nation, Hess said.

"BYU didn't establish a student alumni association until 1983, and is now known as having one of the premier programs in the nation," Hess said.

"This will be different from any of the 20 other SAA conferences I have attended. Among the unique activities planned for the conference, delegates will be introduced to an Aspen Grove leadership training experience, similar to Y-group training, and will attend the Museum of Art 'Imperial Tombs of China' exhibit," said Ida Smith, adviser of the association at BYU since 1983.

"Nearly 50 BYU students have spent hundreds of hours over the past year in the planning and preparation of this conference," Smith said. "The university, students and community have been more supportive than we ever expected."

Sierra West Jewelers turned out to be a great place for Tom and me to find our wedding rings! Not only did they offer an additional discount on the men's band, but also gave benefits for engagement pictures, tuxedo rentals, and invitation packages.

Besides devoting time for us while deciding on the right set for our needs, the Sierra West staff took further time to educate us about the diamond we were purchasing. They discussed the diamond's origin as well as its cut, color, and size.

Overall, we enjoyed our experience with Sierra West Jewelers and would definitely recommend their expertise and wide selection.

After all, your rings will last you for the rest of your life...

Students invited to share dinner with alumni, professors

By HELENA HARO
Universe Staff Writer

The Student Alumni Association is working with alumni and students to get together for a home-cooked meal. The "Twelve Strangers" is a program that brings various alumni, students and faculty with each other for dinner and conversation. "It gives students a great chance to meet with alumni and network with people out in the field of interest," said Jared Booth, student alumni vice president. "The dinners are held throughout the semester, and are on the best times for the people hosting. The junior from Salt Lake City, majoring in biology. "The professors or alumni can cook, ... or they can tell people to bring a dish," Booth said. The goal of the dinners is to give students the opportunity to meet with faculty and alumni in a casual, off-campus setting. This will enhance student-teacher-alumni relations, Booth said. Heidi Hess, assistant alumni activities director, said, "The dinner opens doors and gives students the opportunity to make contacts for post graduation." "The most significant benefit of the dinner is that Brigham Young University as a whole will benefit as alumni, faculty and students grow closer," Booth said. Susan Easton Black, associate dean of the Honors program, hosted one of the dinners and was pleased with the event. "It was better than I expected. The evening was a great idea, and I would do it again," Black said. According to Sojourn, a publication printed by SAA, the dinners promise to share ideas alumni wish they had known while in school. Collette Blackwelder, a student coordinator of one of the dinners, said, "The dinner was very enjoyable. The interaction was excellent, and it was nice to be one-on-one with professors and alumni." SAA got the idea from a district conference, held a few years ago at the University of California-Los Angeles. The association has since tried to implement it, but there has not been much participation the past couple of years, Booth said. SAA needs faculty and alumni who want to participate in this program. Call the SAA office at 378-2164 for more information. Students can sign up through their college advisement centers.

Sign-up policy at Writing Center helps Y students

By JOANNA KASPER
Universe Staff Writer

The Reading and Writing Center has redone its tutorial policies, encouraging students who were previously helped on a first-come-first-serve basis to sign up in advance for a 30-minute tutorial.

According to the new policy, Mondays and Saturdays are designated as walk-in days, while the rest of the week is reserved for students to sign up for tutorials.

However, if students do not show up for their allotted time after five-minutes, their tutor will take a walk-in tutorial, said Penny Bird, director of the Writing Center.

"We were a little frustrated at first because students weren't showing up. But now we are getting almost 90 percent of the students — the change has been really helpful," Bird said.

It helps the students make better use of their time, and also allows students to sign up for tutors which they would like to work with or those who are specialized for a particular subject, said Ben Lane, a reading/writing tutor.

"The students are more relaxed now. Before the changes, the student may have waited for an hour for a tutor, especially around midterms," he said.

Another advantage of the policies is that the tutors are not trying to get through the tutorials as quickly as possible now because they know that they have an allotted amount of time for the student, said Justin Bentley, another reading/writer tutor.

Although the Reading and Writing Center does have an extension program in the Morris Center of Deseret Towers, the Cannon Center in Helaman Halls, and the Athletics Academic Support Center, the new policies will not be enforced in these extension programs, Bird said.

Dixieland jazz combo to feature Alvino Rey

By JANAE HACKWORTH
Universe Staff Writer

Alvino Rey, an accomplished musician and big band leader of the 1930's and 40's, will be making a guest performance with the BYU "Jazz Legacy Dixieland Band" tonight. The performance is a tribute to Rey's accomplishments in music especially to jazz.

"As a young man in New York in the 1920s, he had the opportunity to play with many of the early jazz greats. In the '30s and '40s, he was a major jazz band leader," said Steve Call, director of the Dixieland Band.

Originally from California, Rey became involved in music when he was in high school in Cleveland, Ohio.

During his career in music, Rey traveled all over the United States as well as touring in Europe. Rey also received musical training all over the world.

"I studied with everybody I could," said Rey, currently a resident of Sandy.

While studying in Europe in the '40s and '50s, Rey was taught by Andre Segovia, a master classic guitarist. He also studied under other great people.

"One of my teachers taught Gershwin, Glenn Miller, Duke Ellington, and myself," Rey said.

Rey originally started playing the banjo and worked with small jazz bands, mainly playing dance music in 1927.

ALVINO REY

"I have always played jazz, but a lot of times we didn't play it for people because they wanted dance music," Rey said.

Impressed with Eddie Lang and Joe Venuti, Rey became interested in the hot fiddle and guitar.

"We joined the orchestra, 'Phil's Spitalny,' and played with them for two years," Rey said.

This orchestra would play at the Hotel Pennsylvania. After these performances, Rey would meet with other people interested in jazz. "I would go up to Harlem and play with jazz greats. We would all just sit around playing all night," Rey said.

When the stock crash of 1929 occurred, Rey left New York and headed back to California.

"I was in the staff orchestra at NBC. All radio stations had orchestras back then," Rey said. "I was there until I discovered the electric guitar in 1932."

"Rock-and-roll wouldn't be what it is today without him (Rey) because of his innovations with the electric guitar," Call said. "He also developed the pedal steel guitar used in country music."

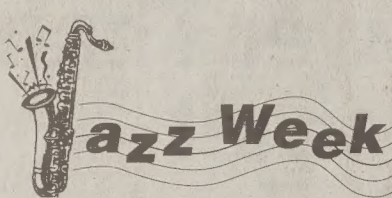

In 1938, Rey formed his own orchestra. "It was my first dance orchestra I had on radio," he said.

During this time, Rey and his band recorded a lot of their music. His recording was cut short when he left to serve in World War II.

After serving in the Navy, Rey came home and formed the band again. This time, the emphasis was on jazz.

Rey was unique in that he was the only big band leader to feature the guitar. "There were a lot of great guitarists, but they never had guitar leaders," Rey said.

Rey has won the All American Jazz Guitar Player award twice. He received the Hall of Fame award for Guitar by the Steel Guitar Convention. His band was also voted as one of the top ten of all bands in the world for all time by the Big Band Academy.

Reid, Majerus combine to dominate WAC

By DICK HARMON
Daily Herald Sports Editor

Rick Majerus and Roger Reid leave little in common off the basketball court, but their teams have generally dominated the Western Athletic Conference basketball scene the past seven years. Their teams have been up and down through different years, but they also won championships and have been the class of the league. This year is no exception. The Cougars have slipped to middle of the pack after being expected to win the title the past two years. Utah is a Top 10-ranked team and has the best chance of winning a ripple in the NCAA Tournament during March Madness.

"I have a great respect for Rick Reid and the job he does. I've said all season Utah is the class of the WAC and their record certainly proves that," said Reid.

Both coaches have the league's winning records. They win on the road and at home with regularity for very solid reasons.

Both coach fundamentals. Both run multiple defenses and myriads of offensive sets. Both use a motion offense as a foundation, yet, when permitted, they are solid believers in post percentage offenses.

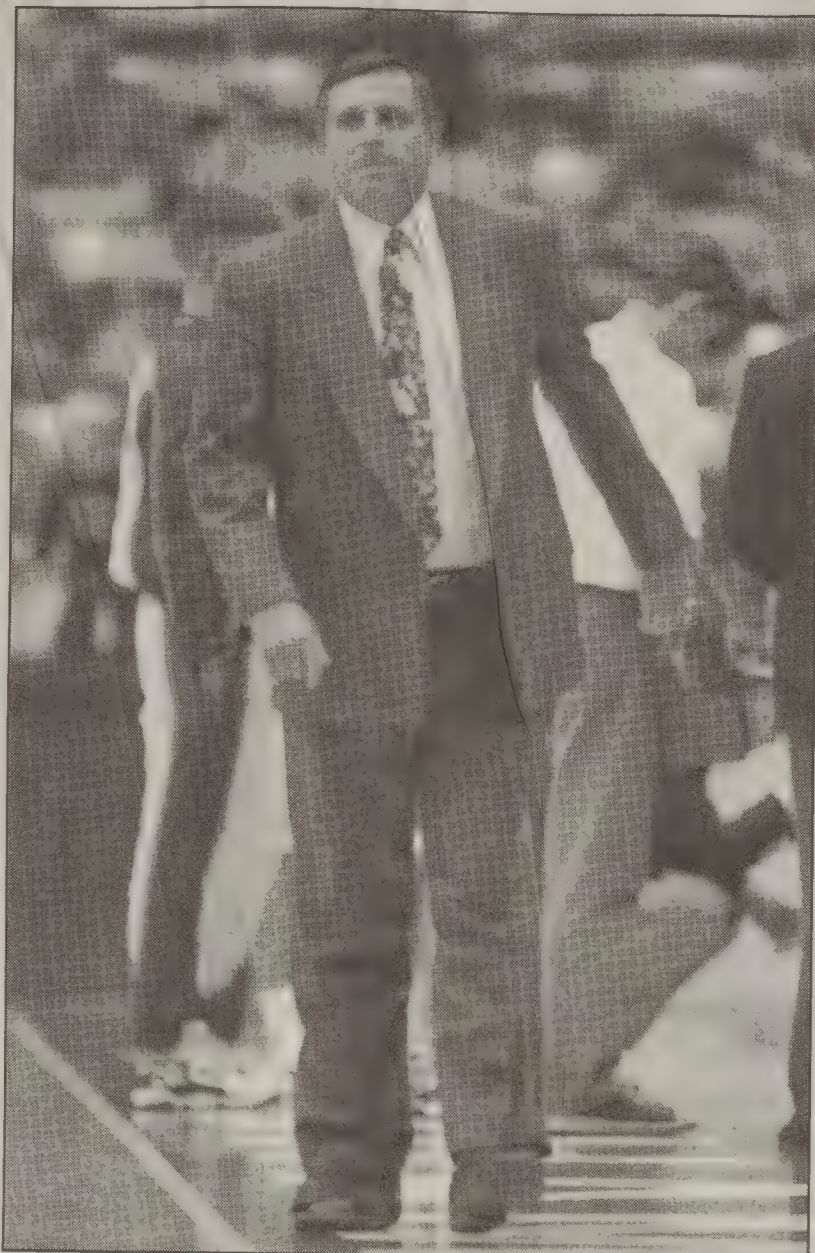

Both demand and expect disciplined play from their players and a little patience with loose cannons. And they both recruit and develop Utah athletes. Coming into this season, Reid ranked 17th and Majerus 19th on the NCAA's list of Winningest Active Division I Coaches by Percentage.

Reid's record was 136-58 (.701). Majerus came to this season with a 126-69 (.699) mark.

In the first BYU-Utah game this season, the Cougars went into the John A. Crerar Center woefully outmatched in experience, personnel, depth and momentum. Yet, in the end, most of the game the Cougars led the Utes until Utah's rebounding strength beat the Cougars on the offensive and Utah prevailed.

Utah's first WAC loss came at home in the Cougars' first game at home in the John A. Crerar Center. Yet the Cougars defeated the Utes by 13 points in Provo.

Reid has held the upper hand in head-to-head competition since both became head WAC coaches. A win by Utah in Provo would tie the personal series 9 to 9.

In Reid's seven years at BYU, his teams have gone 21-9, 21-13, 25-7, 25-9, 22-10 and 22-10. During that time the Cougars have won three WAC titles and gone to the NCAA's five times.

Utah Valley State College coach Jeff Reinert, who works with both Majerus and Reid as a junior college coach, says the Utes and Cougars have been the two best programs in the WAC the past five years.

they have produced the best basketball in the league," said Reinert.

Both have similar win-loss percentages.

"Reid and Majerus do one thing especially well: They get the most out of their players," said Reinert. "Both teams rely heavily, as they should, on instate players. I think you'll find both programs taking advantage of Utah players who are probably more loyal than the outside-the-state player. They work harder, try to add to the chemistry of the team, they are happier because they are playing close to home. The out-of-state player sometimes comes in with his own career in mind. The instate guys want to do whatever they can to win for the team."

Can red, blue blood mix in a marriage?

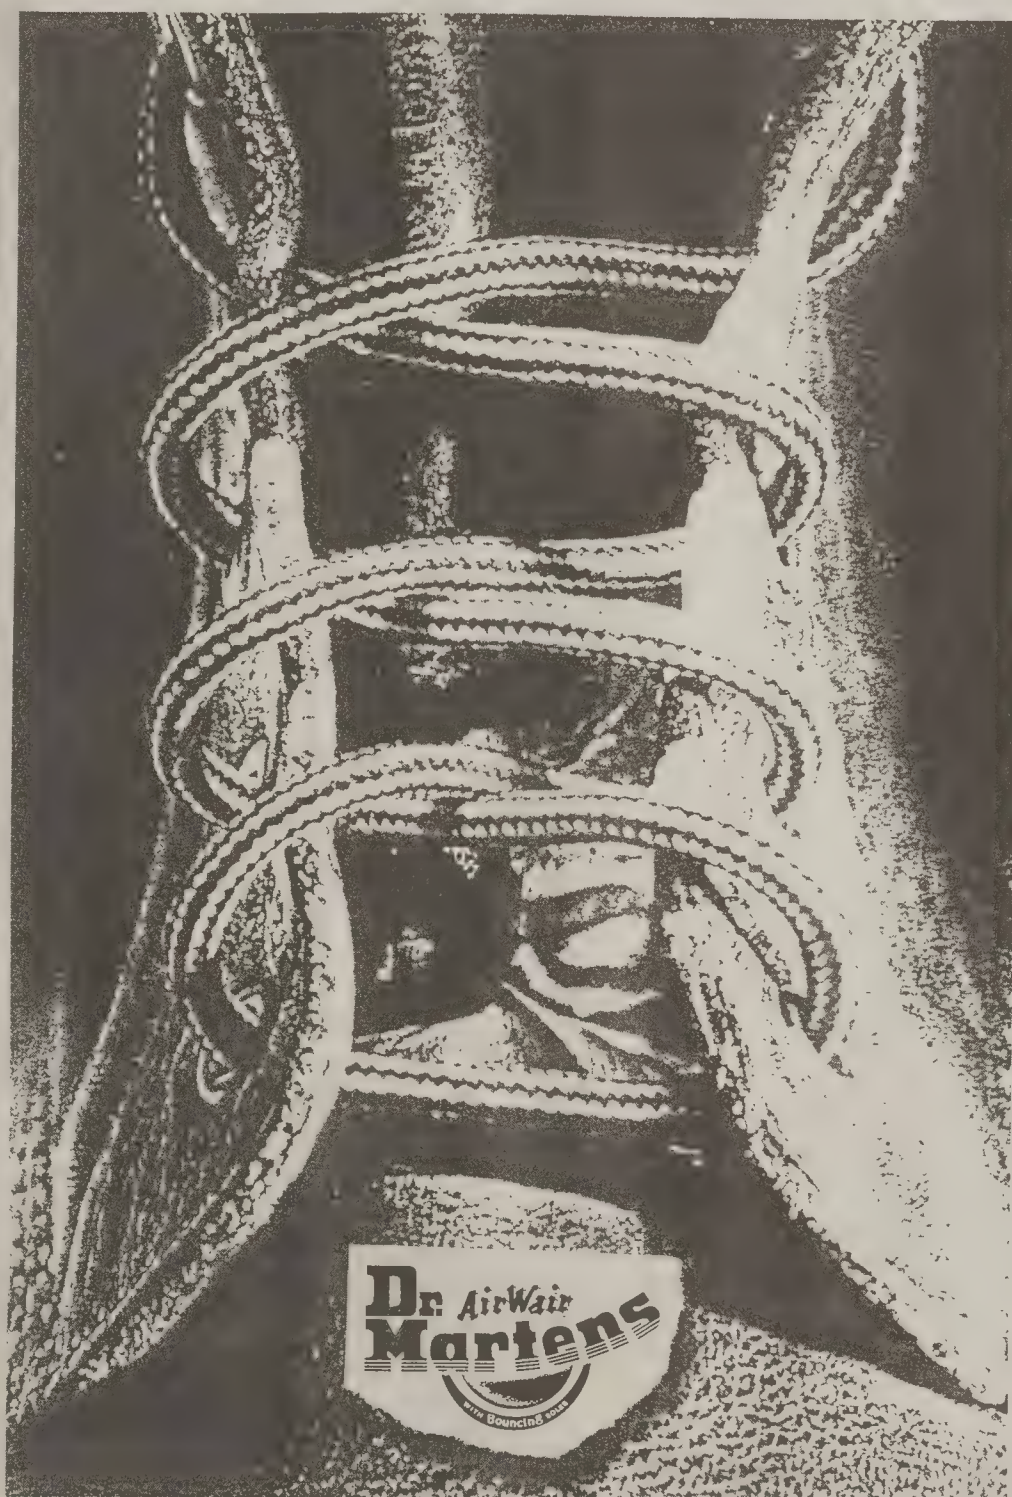

By DAVID BROBERG
Universe Sports Writer

Growing up in a true blue BYU home, my father always cautioned me about the dangers of associating with University of Utah supporters. Earlier this semester, after going on a blind date with a girl from the U, my father, true to his nature, said, "You can't marry someone from the U — that's like marrying outside the Church."

Although I know my father would be pleased with whomever I chose to marry, I wonder if deep down he really meant what he said. This situation led to my questioning if a BYU Cougar could marry a Utah Ute, or if red blood could actually mix with blue blood.

Scott Richards of Salt Lake City, who graduated from the University of Utah, met his wife Janna at a BYU study abroad in Jerusalem. Before their marriage Scott remembers an uncomfortable conversation with Janna's father, a lifetime Golden Cougar

Ruffner learned basketball, work ethic from his dad

By BRIAN ANDERSON
Daily Universe Sports Writer

He began practice with the simple game of "around the world," only this time he wasn't playing with anyone else. Once he made his first shot, he made each successive shot quickly and easily.

From watching Bryon Ruffner play basketball, you couldn't help but deduce he spent many childhood hours, often well into the night, putting in the time and playing "around the world."

Anyone who has seen Ruffner's fluid jumpshot knows it is characterized by a quick release and high arc that sails over players much taller than himself.

Every shooter knows they have to pay a price to become efficient at their craft. Ruffner's work has made him a success wherever he has gone. In high school he was an All-American who led his team to two state championships. In college he was named Big West Freshman of the Year.

For those of us who enjoy playing basketball, most started when we were young by simply shooting around with some of our childhood friends. It was the same for Ruffner — except one of his friends had five years of NBA experience — his father.

"As long as I can remember, my Dad and I have just gone to the gym and messed around and shot baskets," Ruffner said. "I'd just hang out with him and just see what he did. He had a work ethic I could follow."

According to Paul Ruffner, his father, Bryon took advantage of having an NBA father.

"He showed interest quite young, in the third or fourth grades," Paul said. "I was available to coach the young kids and we had many experiences like that."

The fact that his father was in the NBA, however, didn't mean that Bryon would automatically be a basketball player as well. His father didn't push him into the sport.

"He never made me play basketball, or said, 'Come on, let's go,'" Bryon said. "When other kids were doing other things, I'd play basketball. It's just something I love to do."

Bryon's basketball talents might make one conclude that he never left the gym, but it wasn't until high school that Bryon began to focus solely on basketball.

"I just love sports, everything outdoors," Bryon said. "Basketball was my favorite sport and once high school came around, I quit baseball and football and concentrated on basketball."

The start of Bryon's basketball career, however, has been anything but stable. His freshman year was spent at Utah State, after which he left to Chile for two years as a missionary. Upon his return, Bryon redshirted the 1993 season because he suffered two herniated disks in his back.

Bryon then left the Aggies of Utah State to play for the Wolverines of Utah Valley State College. He enjoyed a productive year with UVSC, earning All-America status in the NJCAA. But Bryon still had two years of eligibility due to his redshirted season and was recruited heavily by Utah, BYU, Fresno State and Washington State.

BYU head coach Roger Reid had an open position for Bryon and won the recruiting battle.

"Bryon grew up next to BYU," Reid said. "It was a matter of letting him know we really wanted him. We had seven players leave last year."

Bryon has never regretted his decision.

"I am happy," Bryon said. "I know this is the right place for me. I respect Rick Majerus a great deal and I respect his program. I think he is a great guy, but this is my hometown, this is where my family lives. I grew up around BYU basketball and I'm here playing. I love it."

Coach Reid has been happy with Bryon as well.

"I'd hate to think where we would be without Bryon," Reid said. "For a guy to come in and lead is tough, but Bryon has had the experience. He just stepped in and gave us a great offensive production."

Bryon has a knack for stepping in and working for what he wants, on or off the court. Consider, for example, how he met his wife, Tracie.

He saw her on campus at Utah State and, as luck would have it, a friend of Bryon's was acquainted with his new attraction.

"I said to one of my friends, 'Hey, she's cute,' and so he gave me her name," he said.

Having never met before, he then proceeded to call her father to ask for the phone number to her apartment. Despite the fact that her father was not one of Bryon's acquaintances either, Bryon played the role of a good friend who had simply misplaced Tracie's phone number.

"Well, actually, I kind of lied to him," Bryon said. "I said, 'Hey, I'm a good friend of Tracie's and I lost her phone number,' and he said 'Well, let me get it.'"

Tracie was nervous when she got the call.

"I didn't know what to think," she said. "I was excited but nervous because I didn't know if I had actually seen him on campus."

"I was more nervous when I heard he called my Dad," she said. "I found out he went to all that trouble and I thought, 'This guy means business.'"

Bryon, however, was undaunted when he actually made the call.

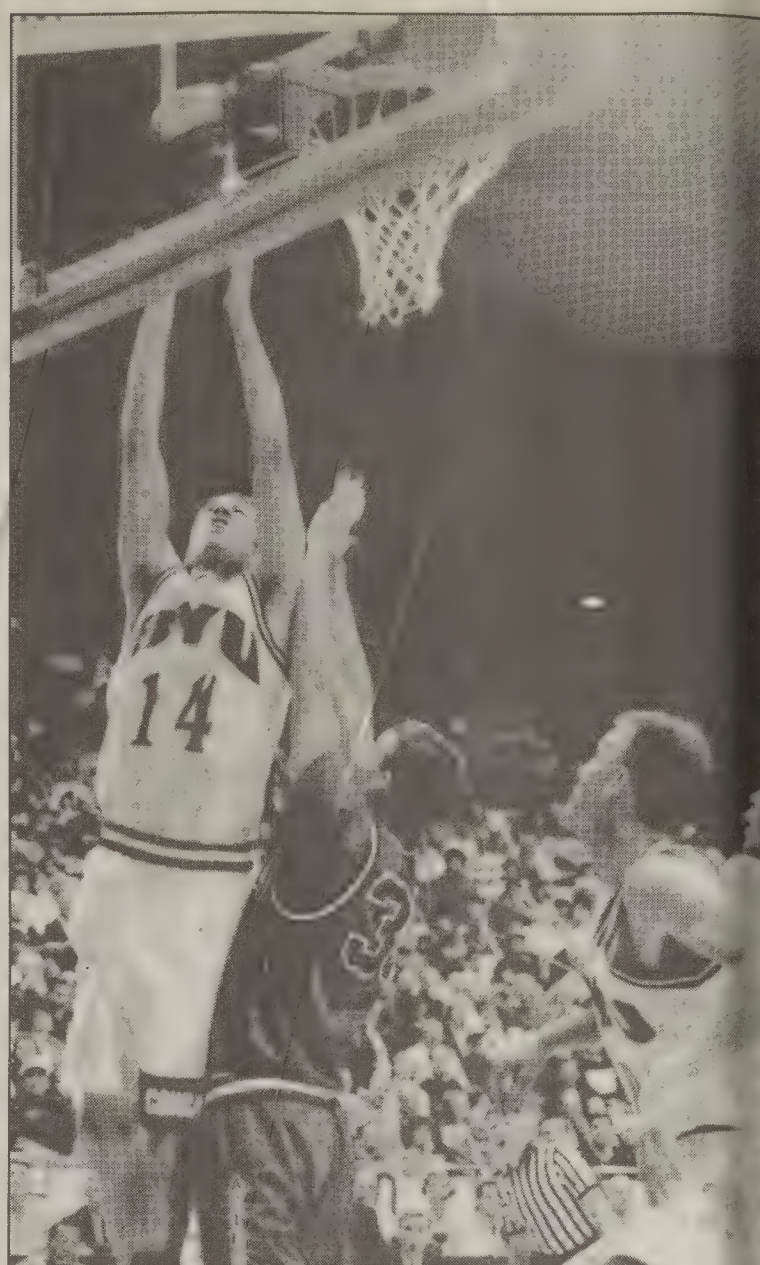

"I just remember, we talked for like 20 or 30 minutes," he said. "She lived in a basement of a house and she went up and asked [some guys who lived above her] if they knew who I was and they did, so then she was even more reluctant to go out with me — after she found out I was an athlete. It was fun."

Ruffner's heroes are Abraham Lincoln and Porter Rockwell because "they stuck up for what they believed in and they knew where they were going [in life]."

While playing basketball has been fun for Bryon, the celebrity status associated with college basketball has required an adjustment.

"That's one of my pet peeves, when people stare at me and they won't say anything," Bryon said. "I don't know if they're just staring or if they recognize me or whatever else."

"A lot of people come up and ask me for autographs and it's just kind of weird, because I think, why do they want my autograph? I remember when I was growing up and seeing these college guys, I thought, 'Wow, these guys play for BYU.' And now it's just like, 'Well, it's just me.' I'm no one special and it's just kind of hard to adjust to."

Bryon Ruffner goes in for a layup in a game earlier this season. Former high school All-American credits his father, who played in NBA, for his basketball skills.

Former Cougar expects BYU to win Saturday

By MARK DURRANT
Special to The Daily Herald

A dark, dismal gloom hangs over Utah Valley.

It isn't the overcast winter sky, nor the fallout from Geneva. It isn't the lack of an Olympic event, nor the fact that there isn't a Republican out there who can beat Bill Clinton. It isn't any of the above. The sadness, despair, heartache and overall disgust that permeates all areas of our life here, in what is supposed to be a "happy" valley, comes directly from the fact that BYU hasn't beaten Utah in football or basketball since Newt and O.J. were the good guys. Where have the days of 56-3 gone? Where are the 40-point WAC tournament wins? What are we supposed to tell our children?

Alas, there is hope, a glimmer of sunshine in an otherwise dark abyss. On Saturday, those guys from up north are coming down to the Marriott Center, a place where the Cougars still own the Utes, the last bastion of all that is right and just in Cougardom. Surely the Cougars can bring home a win and deliver us from our affliction. And I believe they will. Let me tell you why.

First, the Cougars need to win to salvage an otherwise mediocre year. And isn't that what WAC teams have been trying to do over the past few years when BYU came to town? I won't mention any names (Hawaii), but from firsthand experience, and for whatever reason, people love to beat BYU. A win over Utah, BYU's bitter rivals, and a nationally ranked powerhouse, would certainly soothe a lot of ills, not to mention restore a little pride to the bruised and broken Cougar faithful.

Secondly, a win against the Utes could be just what the doctor ordered to give the Cougars the unity and confidence to make a run at the WAC tourney title. Although BYU has unfortunately proven that it can be beaten by any team in

Out of spotlight, Roberts still center of attention

By DOUG FOX
The Daily Herald
Executive Sports Editor

When Ken Roberts came to BYU it was with dreams of an NBA Final Four, or two, dribbling through his mind. As the seconds on his college scoreboard tick toward :00, years later, Roberts and the 15-2 Cougars barely dare dream of earning an invitation to the NCAA's 64-team field — a longshot, highly possible should they capture an automatic bid by winning the WAC Tournament next week. Roberts came to BYU as part of the school's most anticipated recruiting class ever. His commitment followed those by 7-6 center Shawn Bradley and highly touted guard Ryan Cuff. In addition to signing of guard Randy Reid last year before, the Cougars had a player capable of competing on a national level for years to come. Roberts' Final Four dream, one shared by BYU fans everywhere, led to fantasy back in 1993 when Bradley, nearing completion of his LDS mission, decided he would do more good in the world than by paying tithing on his millions rather than burdening BYU by accepting a second scholarship. Cuff lasted one season before leaving for the pastures of Arizona State, eventually Weber State. And while reality has tempered his once-lofty expectations, he hasn't second-guessed his decision to attend BYU. "I thought we'd have a much different team when I first came here than what we have now, but overall I enjoyed it," said Roberts, who, in addition to BYU, narrowed his choices out of high school to Utah and Kansas — a pair of programs that have been ensconced in the Top 20 of the season. "There's a lot of great moments and a lot of hard moments. This year has been a little frustrating being 15.500 and everything, but I've had great teams here and a lot of fun." In fact, BYU coach Roger Reid said one thing he regrets about this season is that his son Randy Roberts both will end their careers in a building-for-future phase. "Those two guys kind of got in a rebuilding year," said Reid. "That's kind of unfortunate." But just like the rest of his career, Roberts has taken opportunities and run with them, carrying no regrets along the way. His greatest sacrifice to the program has been playing for the better part of his life, despite being closer to 6-6 than his listed height of 6-8. "I know Roberts expend so much energy banging with seven-footers, I don't mention the lost time due to foul trouble. Inside pounding encourages, and I only wonder what kind of five numbers he might have from his more natural formation. It would have been easier for me not to have to guard these seven-footers or whatever," said Roberts, who nevertheless is averaging 19 points per game this year. "I just want to play and I'll play wherever I have to. Mostly where it might have been a sacrifice is in my future. I don't know what the future holds and what I might have to do next year, but I know I'm not going to be able to guard Shaquille O'Neal, or anybody that's made it to the next level, down low. So it's been good work for me to do now." Playing in the post at 6-6 has not been without its physical penalties. Roberts has twice had to leave games in progress, last year against Hawaii and this year against Mississippi State, for stitches after taking elbows to the face. "Those bigger guys, their elbows are right at your head so I tend to get hit a lot. I think that's just genetics too," he said referring to older brother Fred, a current Los Angeles Laker and former Cougar. "I think Fred gets hit a lot in the head too." Roberts' blue collar style of play has won him the respect of teammates and opposing coaches alike. "I've been a Ken Roberts fan for a long time," said Air Force coach Reggie Minton, who has been victimized twice by Roberts this season, most recently on Thursday night when he scored 30 points, including 23 in the second half. "He plays hard and within himself. And it looks like this year he has expanded his game. He's an excellent player and you have to go to your guy when the game is on the line." "You're talking about one of the greatest players to ever play in the history of BYU basketball," said Randy Reid. "I think the things that Ken Roberts has been able to accomplish throughout his career have been paramount and second to no one. The thing about it to me is I think he's also one of the most underappreciated players all time in the history of BYU. I come here and all you hear about are Kresimir Cosic and the other guys and even the comparisons that Ken always has with his brother Fred. First of

"Ken is kind of just a guy who goes out and plays the game the way it is supposed to be played. He has gone about playing quietly, without a lot of fanfare. He just gets the job done down in the paint."

— Roger Reid, BYU coach

all, Ken has already scored more points than [Cosic]. And the way that he plays, the type of player he is to me is reason enough to have 23,000 fans come and watch. I would pay money to watch Ken Roberts play basketball."

"Ken is kind of just a guy who goes out and plays the game the way it is supposed to be played," said coach Reid. "He has gone about playing quietly, without a lot of fanfare. He just gets the job done down in the paint."

Much has been said, even within the BYU community, about a perceived dearth of athleticism on this year's Cougar squad. As the poster boy of blue collaredness, Roberts, whose 1,608 points ranks seventh on the BYU career scoring list, merely laughs off that perception.

"We all think of ourselves as athletes, playing on the Division I level," he said. "I don't feel like we're just a bunch of guys that couldn't get in everywhere else. We all had opportunities to go to schools that have 'athletes.' I don't think that you recruit non-athletes, so it's kind of funny."

"I look at Larry Bird and he wasn't a great athlete like Michael Jordan, but he was a player and he probably changed the game as much as anybody. So it kind of hurts. I think a lot of guys have that personal pride that they want to come back and that we have something to prove now."

And even though it was the lure of playing with Bradley and Cuff that helped persuade him away from Utah and Kansas, Roberts said he doesn't dwell on what might have been — although he does allow himself the occasional wonder.

"I really haven't spent much time thinking about the teams we would have had, but I think more about what Shawn could have done here and what Ryan could have done if he'd stayed," said Roberts. "I think we could have done pretty well. We'd have had an older team this year and we'd be pretty experienced. The feeling all around would be much different. It's hard to say, 'Yeah, we'd have been great,' because you never know. Maybe we would have all been ball hogs and we'd need five balls just to play together."

Somehow, one thinks they would have found a way.

BYU seeks to improve late-season performance

By DICK HARMON
Daily Herald Sports Editor

Ending the season strong is key for any college basketball team because winning at the end means you are probably playing for championship titles and are involved in post-season play.

BYU appears to be a team that has struggled to finish strong at the end over the years and there are a lot of philosophies as to why.

A year ago the Cougars were on the verge of running away with a WAC championship before losing to San Diego State and Hawaii on the road and ending the season in second place.

But the year before, the Cougars finished 4-3 and were third place finishers in league play, winning a game against Arizona State in Provo during the NIT, then losing at Fresno State.

Roger Reid believes problems ending the WAC season last year stemmed from playing three good teams on the road at the end of the year.

"San Diego State, Hawaii and Utah were playing pretty good at the end a year ago, so it wasn't as if we were going up against nobodies," he said.

But the Cougars have had some problems at the end, realizing that in post-season play only one team (NIT or NCAA champion) ends the season with a win.

In the final seven games of the season under Reid, BYU is 23-20 in six seasons. The best year was 1990-91 with Shawn Bradley when the team finished 5-2, won the WAC Tournament in Laramie, then registered an NCAA regional win over Virginia in Salt Lake City before bowing to top seed Arizona 76-61.

Under Reid, BYU's teams have generally gotten off to very good starts each season, but in the second half, playing WAC teams for the second time, many opponents with better talent, have found ways to overcome BYU's execution with raw talent.

There is no better example of this than the Cougars' battle with New Mexico in the second half of seasons. The Lobos have had remarkable luck in staving off the Cougars in the second round of WAC play and in WAC Tournament post-season play. The Lobos are the only team Reid has lost to more than he has won (6-7). This

Where there's a rebound, there's a Weidaue

By BRIAN ANDERSON
Universe Sports Writer

When Justin Weidaue was younger, he did not dream of being the next Julius Erving or Magic Johnson. He wanted to be Joe Montana.

"As a boy, I always wanted to play football," BYU's starting forward said. "I never imagined I'd be a basketball player."

But Weidaue was too big to play the position in football that thousands of boys dream of — quarterback. In fact, he always thought he would take a different route.

"I started out in baseball as a boy," Weidaue said. "I was a pitcher and had a great arm. I always figured I could play pro baseball."

That wasn't just any old pipe dream, either. A couple of major league teams expressed interest in Weidaue when he was in high school.

"I was told the Padres, the Twins and the Cardinals had talked with my coach and asked him about me," Weidaue said. "Baseball life was fun, but I didn't think it would make a good living. With baseball, you never know ... they drag you through the minors. Most of all, I just wanted to get an education, and you can't do that if you go to the minors."

As a young boy, Weidaue had an adult-like work ethic when it came to basketball.

"(My dad) put a little rim on the side of the fence (when I was 5), and I remember he bought me a ball," Weidaue said. "I'd always be out there shooting and shooting."

"I remember shooting that ball until it was bald. It was literally bald — you couldn't even grab it. It felt like a volleyball. I just started from there, shooting with my grandpa and my dad."

Although Weidaue stood out to many recruiters, it was a different case when it came to his future wife. Although they were in the same math lab, the 6-foot-7 Weidaue didn't catch her attention at first.

"I hadn't really noticed him," said Dawn Weidaue, of the first month of the semester. "I thought he was kind of cute, (but) he went straight to the back of the class."

Both Dawn and Justin were getting ready to leave their algebra class when they noticed they were alone.

"I got up from class one day," Justin said, "and I had my letterman jacket on. She asked me, 'Well, what sport do you play?' We ended up walking and we went to the math lab together. Then I took her to lunch that first day and it just sort of happened. It was pretty cool."

It sounds pretty simple, but for Dawn, a native of North Carolina, the thought of marrying a Salt Lake City boy had never crossed her mind. Her mother wanted a son-in-law from the South who would bring her daughter back home, she said.

"You know, as a kid growing up, I always thought girls from the South were real pretty," Justin said. "I used to kid around because of their funny accent. But when I met her, I noticed she had a little twang in her voice, and I really thought it was kind of cute. That's one of the reasons I pursued our relationship — I thought it was fun."

They have also had a lot in common. Dawn was an All-Conference basketball and volleyball player in high school.

"She's a pretty good basketball player," Justin said. "We've got three of the wives (of the basketball players) on a (intramural) team here, and she really enjoys it."

Weidaue has had fun playing basketball with BYU center Kenneth Roberts. They met when they played on the same team in a tournament in Las Vegas.

"I was in the fourth grade, and he was in the fifth grade," Weidaue said. "I was the youngest guy on the team. That's where I first met Kenny — we actually roomed together."

They got to know each other quite well at that tournament with the help of a certain inebriated individual.

"Somebody was yelling outside and knocking on our door," Roberts said. "You know, four little kids in a room by themselves. Justin got up and just grabbed the ashtray off the table and brought it back to bed with him."

"(I was) ready to knock his lights out," Weidaue said.

He has carried that enthusiasm over into his game.

"He's always been a solid player, a guy who goes out every day and works hard," Roberts said.

Weidaue, who idolized Bird as a youth because of scrappy play, has been content just get his work done quietly, playing the Cougars in Provo. Diego State head coach Fred Kle had high praise for Weidaue.

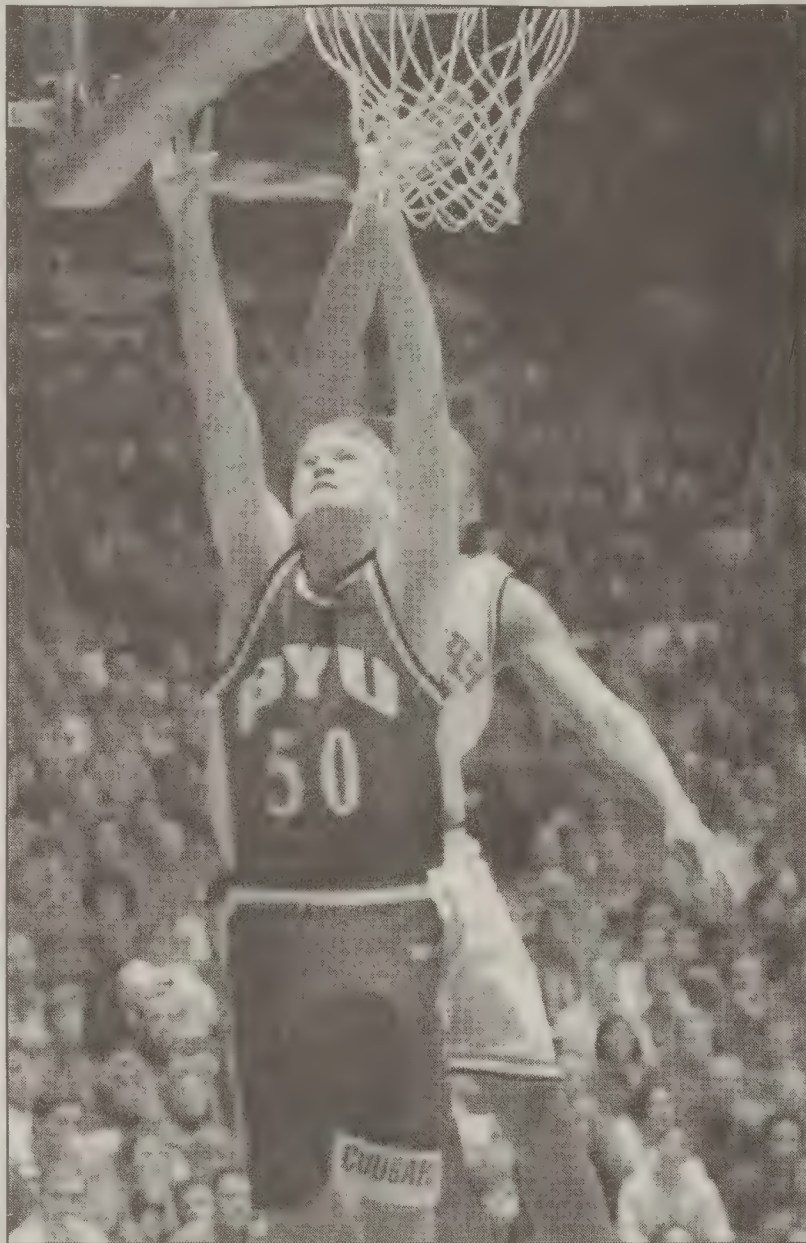

"He doesn't get a lot of accolades but everybody wishes they were that guy that will get four or five a game or 13 rebounds like he does tonight — (without having) to about looking at the point guard. He just goes out and plays hard."

Ruffner, Reid and Roberts going to get their points, but give Weidaue a chip in a lot for this but they don't really get the credit.

Weidaue agreed with them about his responsibilities on the team.

"There's a lot of truth in it," said. "My role this year has been strictly defensive, including rebounding. The coach pulled me aside earlier and said, 'You know, if you do is defensive rebounding, I'll be the happiest guy you're going to play.'"

"I've tried to really concentrate on my defense — especially rebounding. To me, getting a rebound is just as good as scoring. When I get a rebound now, I like I've scored two points. I get 13 rebounds, you get 26 in the game — so I'm the happy guy in the world. Anything beyond that is just extra points are an added asset. I'm happy I can be out there and Justin Weidaue goes for a rebound during the first game against Utah Jan. 2 at Utah. He is averaging 7.5 rebounds per game this season.

DURRANT:

the WAC, the Cougars have also proven that they can beat anyone in the WAC, even Utah.

Anyone who watched the first meeting between these two teams had to leave with the impression that BYU could have beaten and, in fact, should have beaten the Utes had they shown up on the boards in the second half. Utah, for its part, has shown that it is by no means invulnerable, with losses to Fresno St. at home and lowly Wyoming on the road.

Not to say that Utah isn't very good. As much as I hate to say this, the Utes are very good and deserve their national ranking. They may have the best player to ever don a Ute uniform in Keith Van Horn and a powerful supporting cast in Brandon Jessie and Mark Rydall. But as funny as this sounds, these are not the guys that Roger Reid and the boys should be worried about. In the past it's been the guys who you don't expect to hurt you that end up burying the Cougars.

Of course, you can't let a guy like Van Horn go off, you've got to keep him in check, but BYU will be ready for him. It's the Ben Catons, the Michael Doleacs, the Andre Millers that can sneak up on you and get you when you least expect it. If BYU can stop those guys, keep the headliners to their averages and keep on an even keel in rebounding (which is no small task against the bigger and stronger Utes), the Cougars will walk away with a victory. Yes, I said BYU will win the game.

So keep your head up Cougar fans, the hour of our deliverance is nigh. Back are the days of joy and gladness. Back are the days of a full house at the Marriott Center. No longer will we have to endure the taunts and jeers from our neighbors up North. In essence, back to the way things are supposed to be. My prediction for the game? BYU by three of course.

Watts up with BYU-Utah rivalry

By CHAD HOOPES
Daily Universe Sports Writer

The basketball rivalry between BYU and Utah even surfaces in the 11 keeping of the series. According to BYU, the series began in 1918 and the Cougars have an 81-66 advantage. But Utah has a slimmer advantage for the series at 61-58. The differences in record books are a mirror of the rivalry on the court.

Stan Watts, who coached the Cougars between 1949 and 1972, is a stranger to the rivalry on the court. He coached against the Utes 26 times, winning 26 times. He has more wins against Utah than any other BYU basketball coach. "There has been a great rivalry," Watts said. "It has been fun and competitive. Of course the BYU and Utah fans hate each other, but we didn't find the hatred and we had good clean competition. When we were happy and when we lost we tried to do a little better." During the 1950 season, because of construction on the new Fieldhouse, the Cougars played all of their conference games in the Einer Nielsen Fieldhouse, the home of the University of Utah. So BYU played all four games against the Utes on the road. Watts won three of the four games. Jimas, a BYU guard from 1967 under Stan Watts, never played against Utah in his four years at BYU. His freshman team won 11 meetings with the Utes and 10 of the varsity teams he played against the Utes.

"There was always a very intense rivalry. There was a lot of emotion. A member coming to Utah and having a cheerleader come out on the court and take a swing at me. There were always a lot of verbal altercations back and forth between the players on the court."

- Dick Nemelka, former BYU player

Watts believed one of his greatest qualities was the ability to give confidence in his players. "I gave you a lot of confidence. When you played for him, he always felt like you could play and you didn't have to look over your shoulder at the bench."

For Jimas, the most memorable game against Utah occurred during the 1965-66 season.

"One game we won at Utah 93-85 as a great game," Jimas said. "I had three shots at the end of the game and the ball just wouldn't go in. So we ended up winning."

That game also stands out in Nemelka's mind. A BYU player from 1964-66.

During the 1965-66 season, the Cougars were led by Jerry Chambers who finished in the Final Four of the NCAA tournament.

Watts was fortunate enough to see the last basket at the end of the game to win by a point in Salt Lake City," Nemelka said. "They came after I made the shot and they had a couple of shots."

The games weren't always the most memorable part of the rivalry for Nemelka. "It was always a very tense game. There was a lot of emotion. A member coming up to Utah and having a cheerleader come out on the court and take a swing at me."

"There were always a lot of verbal altercations back and forth between the players on the court."

Nemelka was unique in his family, because the other members of the family went to the University of Utah. His brother played basketball for the Utes. When he had a good night and the Cougars lost, the family was happy.

During the 22 years Watts coached the Cougars, they won eight conference championships and won two NIT championships. The Utah games were pivotal every season.

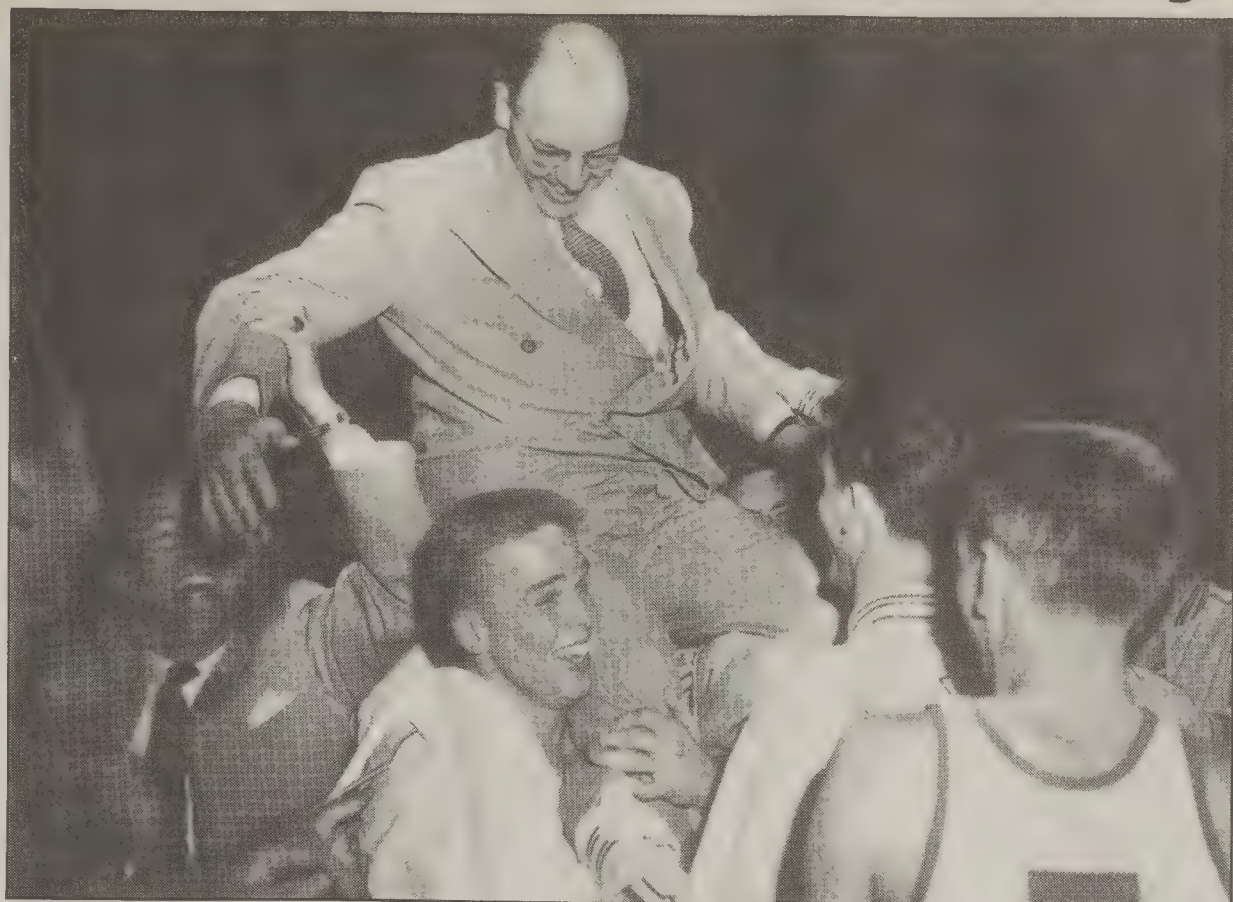

Watts wasn't even present at the most memorable game of his coaching career against the Utes. During the 1971 season, Watts was diagnosed with cancer so he spent most of the season in the hospital. The team, coached by assistant coach Pete Witbeck, beat Utah while their head coach watched from the ICU at the hospital.

Witbeck said every game was a big game but that 1971 game was special.

"The game that stands out the most was the year that Stan was being treated for cancer. We stopped the team bus at the hospital. Stan was touch-and-go at that time after 13 hours of surgery. The team captains, Jim Miller and Steve Kelly, and I went up to visit Stan."

"He had been given three to six months to live and they weren't sure they were going to see their coach again. The captains were touched, so they talked to the team in a very emotional moment to tell them they had to win one for the coach."

"The Utes had been picked to win the WAC and we were picked to end in fifth or sixth place. We went out and won the ball game by 13 points for the conference championship. The team played very inspired and it was almost a mistake-free ball game."

BYU players carry coach Stan Watts on their shoulders after the Cougars captured the NIT championship in 1951. Watts coached 51 games against Utah during his tenure, posting a record of 26-25.

BYU coach Stan Watts is greeted by Heisman Trophy winner Jim Plunkett at the hospital during his 1971 treatments for cancer.

The BYU-Utah games have always produced exciting basketball and distinct memories.

Watts believes this week's game will not be an exception.

"We gave them a good ball game in Salt Lake and our kids played well. I think we have a chance. But they have got some horses. Van Horn is a good one and Jessie impresses me. It will be a battle and there will probably be a little bloodletting."

Club member.

"He asked me why I was going to the U and said something along the lines of, 'You're going to the wrong school and now you're going to take my daughter away from BYU,'" Scott said.

Janna, who grew up attending BYU games since she was 8 years old, said she always thought she would marry someone from BYU.

"I was raised with the idea that I needed to go to BYU because that's where my husband would be," Janna said. "I was ingrained with the way of thinking that people who go to the U are heathens and don't mix."

The Richardses have had some interesting experiences at BYU/U of U sporting events over the years. Soon after their marriage, Scott accompanied Janna and her father to the U of U football game at Cougar Stadium.

"Scott wanted to wear a Utah sweatshirt, but I told him, 'You're sitting in Cougar country with all the Cougar Club members; you just can't wear a U sweatshirt,'" Janna said.

Three years ago while watching BYU lose in football to the University of Utah, Janna remembers her amazement at seeing her husband cheer after the Utes made a last-minute field goal to win. "Here was this horrible thing happening to my team and my husband was jumping up and down cheering," she said. "It was like he was not real, I was in shock."

One year when they were watching a BYU/U of U game with Janna's family, Scott cheered for the Utes. "My dad gave him a cold stare and I think he realized that what he did was a big deal," Janna said. "It was just not right. It was like bringing a sip of whiskey."

Sharon Summerhays of Orem didn't learn that her husband was red until after they were married. "I didn't really know he was a Ute fan because we started dating after the basketball season and got married in August before the football season," Summerhays said.

Summerhays grew up in Tennessee watching the BYU games on satellite at her LDS stake center and never thought she would marry a Utah man. "The Utes were like the devil and I didn't want to marry a Ute or anyone from the state of Utah," Summerhays said. "Somehow I got both."

Summerhays and her husband enjoy teasing each other when rooting for their own teams.

"We're not above saying something about the other team," she said. "When I first got married, I was all over the Utes, but now we are a little more civilized."

U of U fan, Brian Criddle of Salt Lake City, who is married to a Cougar fan, remembers attending a Utah game when his wife brought a book along. "She read it the entire game," he said. "I know she would never do that at a BYU game."

During the 1994 U of U/ BYU football game, Criddle wore red and his wife wore blue as they sat in the alumni section at Rice Stadium. When BYU took the lead in the game Criddle's wife stood up and cheered.

"Everyone around us looked stunned as if they felt her husband should put her in her place," Criddle said. "I just let the situation work itself out. When the U would score, the people around us would aim their cheers right back at her."

"You're either blue or you're red," Janna said. "It doesn't have anything to do with sports — it's about where you hang your hat. It's either a blue hat or a red hat."

SLAPSTICK: A UVSC batter attempts to slap a pitch down the line against BYU last year. The Cougars open their season this weekend.

Softball team hoping improvement shows

By SCOTT APGAR
Universe Sports Writer

With the addition of a new pitcher and the return of a veteran slugger, the women's softball team starts off its season this weekend in St. George.

Assistant coach Angie Draper said she feels the team will have the two top pitchers in the St. George tournament.

Danielle Anderson is a new Cougar pitcher, who transferred to BYU from the University of Puget Sound in Washington as a result of her recent marriage. Anderson was 22-3 last year at Puget Sound, and she said she hopes to pitch well for BYU.

"I think I'll be ready," Anderson said of this weekend's tournament.

Another pitcher, sophomore Julie Risdon, said she has to control the location of her pitches to help the Cougars win. Risdon said she needs to vary her pitches and get ahead in the count to be able to take control of the game.

Risdon said an improved defense this season increases her confidence when pitching.

"I'm more confident of our defense this semester, and it helps me to have confidence when I pitch," Risdon said.

Junior slugger Jill Combe will play for the first time since her return from serving a mission in Louisville, Ky. Combe said she hopes to lose some of her rustiness.

"A lot of people expect me to hit," Combe said.

Combe said that the team is talented but needs to unify.

"Everybody has a lot of individual talent, but we need to pull it together," Combe said.

Junior Sara Roberts is confident the Cougars will be able to hit well against their opponents this weekend.

"If we can do well against our pitchers in practice, we shouldn't have any problem in the tournament," she said.

Draper said the team really needs to focus on its batting.

"We want to be aggressive at the plate," she said.

Roberts also feels the tournament will be an opportunity for the team to prove itself against other schools.

"It's our first chance to prove how we're going to play for the season," she said.

"A lot of teams think we're going to play the same as last year," teammate Sunshine Van Wie said. She added that the tournament is an opportunity for the team to prove how much it has improved.

The tournament will begin Friday at Snow College in St. George, and BYU will play its first game against Ricks College.

BYU netters' tough schedule continues vs. South Alabama

By JARED CAPSON
Universe Sports Writer

BYU's 18th-ranked women's tennis team returns to the court today against the University of South Alabama, continuing a schedule noted by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association as one of the toughest in the country.

South Alabama (5-1) is ranked 27th and returns five players from last year's 17-4 team.

BYU is coming off a three-match weekend at the USTA/ITA Women's National Indoor Tennis Championship where they beat No. 15 Pepperdine and lost to 8th-ranked Wake Forest and No. 10 Arizona.

In spite of the two losses, the tournament helped raise BYU's level of play, women's tennis coach Tracy MacDonald said.

"The level of tennis that I saw, particularly out of our top three players, was much higher," MacDonald said. "They are playing a more aggressive style and forcing more shots."

The 8-5 Cougars have already played six top-ten teams this season.

"We start off with a very heavy schedule," BYU head coach Tracy MacDonald said. "We've played twice as many dual matches as eight of the other ten teams at nationals."

Taking on so many tough teams at the beginning of their schedule has taken a toll on BYU. Five players on the team are playing with injuries while Jennifer Saret is listed as questionable for today's match due to an ankle injury.

"South Alabama will have a good team, so we're going to have to play pretty hard," MacDonald said. "Hopefully the injuries won't be too much of a factor."

The match is scheduled for 1 p.m. at the indoor courts south of the Smith Fieldhouse. Admission is free.

Juliet Alder, a BYU junior from Ogden, Utah, is optimistic about today's game.

"It'll be a good match, but I think we can win," Alder said. "When we decide to play we can really play well."

Wrestlers hope crowd puts them over the top

By DAVID BROBERG
Universe Sports Writer

Friday night's home finale, the Cougar wrestlers look to take down a tenacious Wyoming team on the Smith Fieldhouse mats at 7:30 p.m.

The meet means everything and the assistant coach Larry Nugent only will a win give the 5-6 teams a winning season, but it will give the Cougars a good seeding in the WAC tournament on March 9. The team has been ranked as high as No. 1 this season and finished third in the prestigious Las Vegas tournament, but have recently suffered losses to 20 teams Nebraska and Fresno State as well as Oregon State.

Coming is more beatable now than they were a month ago," Nugent ing has two wrestlers ranked in the top ten — Andy Reese at 177 and Hickenlooper at 126. The boys also have a reputation of being a loud following of fans to the mats, which adds to the success of their program.

"I hope we can get a big crowd to counter them," Cougar wrestler Gary Sanderson said.

The home crowd has been a big boost for the Cougars this season. BYU, ranked No. 30 by Amateur Wrestling News, has an impressive 4-1 record at the Smith Fieldhouse this year, including an upset win against Oregon State.

"Anyone who was at the Oregon State meet knows how the crowd can make a difference," Nugent said.

"I think the crowd has been really great this year," Sanderson said. "When you got a big crowd, it helps to get you motivated and pull out the win."

With the help of the home crowd, the Cougars are confident they can upset the Cowboys.

"I honestly think we're a tough opponent for them," said senior captain Morgan Robertson, who will be wrestling in his final home match. "I think if we show up and wrestle how we know how to wrestle, anything can happen."

Gretzky no longer singing the Blues after being traded

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Wayne Gretzky, the hockey great who failed to win a Stanley Cup in Los Angeles, was traded to the St. Louis Blues on Tuesday after weeks of rumor and speculation about his future.

To know Wayne Gretzky is a hockey fan, said the Blues' spokesman, the owners of the Blues gave no other details on the trade, involving the most prolific scorer in NHL history.

However, the Blues were expected to hold a news conference later in the day.

"We're ready to hold a party," Kerth

Kings would not confirm the trade had been completed.

Part of the trade from St. Louis to the Kings governor Bob Sanderman and Kings general manager Sam McMaster were meeting into the evening at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif.

Earlier in the day, Sanderman announced there was "no conclusion" to the negotiations with Gretzky and his agent, but the talks were to resume.

"We want to do what's right for Wayne," Sanderman said at the time. "At the same time, we owe it to our fans to do what's right for the Los Angeles Kings."

"What we're wrestling with is can we do what's right for everybody and have him remain with the Kings. That's our hope and desire."

However, the 35-year-old superstar has played his last game for the Kings and might now be in the lineup for the Blues on Thursday night in Vancouver.

That initial announcement dampened anticipation in St. Louis, where the news conference was watched by reporters on a monitor and the team had a podium ready for a satellite news conference of its own.

Gretzky was in the meeting while the Kings practiced for Wednesday night's game. He and Barnett left the building before the news conference began.

Gretzky can become a free agent after this season, and the Kings risked losing him without compensation if they don't sign him.

With the prospect of Gretzky coming to St. Louis, the Blues sold 2,200 tickets in the last two days.

"I'm just one player — it takes 20 guys to win," said Gretzky, who has 15 goals and 65 assists this season. "But Mike Keenan wants to win. That's always nice when you're playing in this league, to play for a guy that always wants to win."

Rwandan genocide could have been less severe

Associated Press

ISS — Many thousands of Rwandans died because the outside world ignored early warnings of genocide and then botched its vast efforts, a scathing international commission concludes. Humanitarian action cannot substitute for political action," said the report, which blamed the vacillation of world leaders for encouraging genocide and triggering a mass exodus across Rwandan borders. The report, an unprecedented use in self-criticism formally the "International Response to Genocide: Lessons From Rwanda Experience," is to be released March 12; an 80-page summary was obtained Tuesday by The Associated Press. The commission was initiated by the United States, the European Union, 18 other countries, U.N. agencies, private aid groups, the Red Cross, the World Bank and others. The report praised donors and aid agencies for an "impressive and, on the whole, effective relief operation," but said poor coordination, rivalries and waste caused many needless deaths. Furthermore, it said, timely international action would have made the relief action unnecessary.

Clear warning signs of building ethnic tensions, evident in early 1994 and proclaimed by various observers, were "ignored, discounted or misinterpreted," the report said. To those responsible for the eventual genocide, the hesitation and indecision was a signal of unwillingness to intervene. "The international community failed to stop or stem the genocide, and in this regard shares responsibility for the extent of it," the report said bluntly. From April through July 1994, some 500,000 to 800,000 minority Tutsis were shot, hacked and clubbed to death in Rwanda by majority Hutus. The murderous frenzy by the army and Hutu-dominated militias was unleashed when the nation's president, a Hutu, died April 7 in a still-unsolved plane crash. International aid began only in June, when hundreds of thousands of Rwandans fled their bloody country and burdened neighboring Tanzania and Zaire. The report says 100,000 of three million displaced people died of cholera, dysentery or violence in the squalid, chaotic refugee camps, which lacked water and sanitation. Faced with overwhelming numbers and impossible conditions, relief workers tried to persuade the refugees, mostly Hutus, to return home. But that put those who ventured back at severe risk from the new Tutsi-led government. On Tuesday, the respected Paris daily Liberation reported that Tutsis had killed at least 100,000 Hutus in bloody vengeance since mid-1994. The newspaper said it arrived at the number by analyzing lists of missing or dead painstakingly kept by village authorities in the central province of Gitarama, then extrapolating the results around the country. France, originally a sponsor of the report, withdrew its backing because of the blunt findings, according to Danes who drafted the report. French officials declined comment, but U.S. and European diplomats confirmed France's objections. A section of the report labeled France's role in the affairs of Rwanda and the 1994 relief effort "contradictory." Before the crisis, France backed the Hutu-dominated government, despite human rights abuses, and did little to support the small U.N. peace force eventually dispatched. Operation Turquoise, the unilateral French relief effort begun in mid-summer 1994, saved many lives, the report said, but came 2 1/2 months late and created problems for relief efforts elsewhere by failing "to disarm the extremists or prevent suspected organizers of the genocide from escaping."

The report said fast action by many organizations prevented a greater catastrophe but noted a number of lessons for the future exposed by weak points in 1994: •Early-warning systems are essential, not only to head off crisis but also to provide emergency relief. Rivalry between Red Cross and U.N. officials in the region kept them from alerting agencies that a quarter-million refugees were on the move and heading toward Goma, Zaire. •Commercial charters are far cheaper and more effective than military operations, such as the American airlift to Goma.

UTA provides inexpensive rides to tourist sites

By MARIAM LEWIS
Universe Staff Writer

You're bored and looking for something to do. You want the activity to be interesting — you still don't know what it is — but you know it's not within walking distance of your apartment, and you don't have a car. What's the answer? Utah Transit Authority, also known as the bus. Don't laugh. The bus can get you to lots of places of interest. UTA has routes that run from Payson to Ogden. Perhaps in celebration of Utah's centennial year, you want to check out some Utah history. City Center Daughters of Utah Pioneers Museum in Payson contains many pioneer relics. It even has a furnished log cabin inside the museum. The museum is open from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. on Fridays. A bus ride to Payson will cost 75 cents. If Payson doesn't excite you, perhaps Salt Lake City holds something you might enjoy. Downtown Salt Lake City is brimming with history sites. Temple Square, the Museum of Church History and Art, and the Joseph Smith Memorial Building are just some of the places to take tours, see displays and be educated about church and state history. The express bus to Salt Lake City costs $1.70, each way. If history doesn't appeal to you, there is always golf. American Fork is home to an 18-hole championship public golf course. UTA route maps and schedules are available from the information desk in the Wilkinson Center. So next time you're itching to get out of Provo, jump on the bus and dare to be adventurous.

Circle of Honor

The Circle of Honor Poster Ceremony

The following is a textual excerpt from the ceremony held in the Maeser Building foyer on Monday, February 26, 1996 at 12:30 p.m. to introduce The Circle of Honor poster and its related Honor Code campaign. Those who presented the text included President Merrill J. Bateman, Vice President Alton Wade, Stake President Noel B. Reynolds, and Wesley McDougal, BYUSA President.

This majestic building has been named after a memorable figure in the history of Brigham Young University: Dr. Karl G. Maeser. On April 15, 1876, Dr. Maeser, already an experienced teacher, was appointed as the first principal of Brigham Young Academy for an experimental term. His appointment was made to provide a modest but consistent salary to Dr. Maeser who was working with Brigham Young to pay off his debt to the church. However, his experimental term turned into a permanent position as Dr. Maeser struggled to keep the Academy functioning and productive.

Because of his talents, character, and perseverance, Dr. Maeser taught us principles, gave us guidelines, and was a personal model for students, faculty, and staff. Much of our BYU tradition has been built upon his stories and example. President Gordon B. Hinckley revived one of these great traditions in his Devotional Address on October 17, 1995. He said, "There has been told and retold on this campus for generations the words of Karl G. Maeser concerning honor. They need to be repeated here, and across the world. I suppose all of you have heard them before, but I give them again.

"I have been asked what I mean by "word of honor," I will tell you. Place me behind prison walls—walls of stone ever so high, ever so thick, reaching ever so far into the ground—there is a possibility that in some way or another I may be able to escape; but stand me on the floor and draw a chalk line around me and have me give my word of honor never to cross it. Can I get out of that circle? No, never? I'd die first."

"My father was a student of Karl G. Maeser at this institution long ago. He heard those words himself from the lips of Brother Maeser. He repeated them to us, again and again. They have become embossed as if they were words of scripture. They set forth with simplicity and eloquence what this Church expects of me and you" (p. 8-9).

Since President Hinckley reminded our community of Dr. Maeser's memorable analogy, it is appropriate to keep this tradition of honor on our campus and adopt honor as part of our character. For these reasons, we are pleased to present this "Circle of Honor" poster which visually captures Dr. Maeser's analogy of honor: a representative statue of Dr. Maeser next to his building encircled by a band of chalk.

With the introduction of this poster, we begin a new tradition at BYU. We acknowledge our tradition of living by honor which began with Karl G. Maeser. More importantly, we continue that tradition with each student who is admitted and comes to BYU. The Circle of Honor began at our founding, but continues only when each of our community members, including students, faculty, and staff, live by that tradition of honor. Welcome into the Circle of Honor.

As you see this poster in the building and elsewhere on campus, remind yourself of your commitment to honor which is such an integral part of your BYU experience. Ask yourself, "Where do I stand in the Circle of Honor?" And when you answer, "I am right in the middle," compliment yourself for maintaining a significant BYU tradition. When you answer, "I am on the edge," or even "I have broken the circle," taken an opportunity to move back into the center of the Circle of Honor. Help us keep the Circle of Honor an unending chain of integrity.

Becoming familiar with Dr. Maeser's Circle of Honor and remaining within our own Circle of Honor is central to a BYU education because as President Spencer W. Kimball said, "[BYU] has no justification for its existence unless it builds character, creates and develops faith, and makes men and women of strength and courage, fortitude and service—men and women who will become stalwarts in the kingdom and bear witness of the divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is not justified on an academic basis only. . . . It is justified only if "the morality of the graduates of this University provides the music of hope for the inhabitants of this planet" (Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, p.395).

Indeed, the expectation of character building is so great at BYU, that it has been identified as one of the four "Aims of a BYU Education." A statement from the "Aims of a BYU Education" document clearly explains why this aim is central to the mission of BYU:

"A BYU education . . . reinforces such moral virtues as integrity, industry, reverence, modesty, self-control, courage, and compassion. Beyond this, BYU aims not merely to teach students a code of ethics but to develop in them those attributes of character that flow from the long-term application of gospel teachings to their lives. That is, it aims to help them become partakers of the divine nature. This begins with understanding humankind's eternal nature and ends with the blessing of eternal life, when human character reflects in fully flowered form the divine attributes of godliness. . . ."

"President David O. McKay taught that character is the highest aim of education. His first aim was knowledge—understanding one's choices and their implications. His second aim was wisdom—being wise enough to know which choices to make. His third and highest educational aim was character—actually making the right choices, then from choosing wisely, becoming all that one can and should be as God's child. True education, therefore, "seeks to make men and women not only good mathematicians, proficient linguists, profound scientists, or brilliant literary lights, but also honest men [and women] with virtue, temperance, and brotherly love. . . ."

"A BYU education thus brings together the intellectual integrity of fine academic training with the spiritual integrity of personal righteousness. The result is a sense of discipline and craftsmanship that reflects itself in the highest professional academic standards, shaped and strengthened by the highest standards of personal, even Christlike, attributes" (p. 5-6). The BYU Honor Code which includes the Dress and Grooming Standards, Residential Living Standards, and Ecclesiastical Endorsement program are designed as tools for us to evaluate our progress in this aim of character development. When, on our honor, we maintain these high standards, we discipline our lives according to high standards of "personal, even Christlike, attributes" and begin to make connections between academic and spiritual preparations (Aims of a BYU Education, p.6).

The tradition of honor and character development is rooted in the BYU tradition as is illustrated by Karl G. Maeser's analogy of the Circle of Honor. Let's celebrate together as a campus community of students, faculty, and staff our grand tradition of honor and frequently contemplate upon the development of our character as identified as one of the aims of a BYU education.
